OCCULT LITERATURE.

As our friends the booksellers know, there is always a certain demand for books relating to subjects about which nothing definite is known, such as clairvoyance, telepathy, occultism, crystal gazing, and the like. It is perfectly natural for human nature to be interested in invisible influences, and to say that those who believe in such influences are neurotic or have a screw loose somewhere is not getting any 'forrader.' Curiously enough, the sale of works about matters, or rather manifestations, outside the routine of life is never large—the ordinary healthy human animal wisely bothers not about them—but the fact that one can rarely take up a secondhand book catalogue without finding a little batch of these books on supernatural subjects shows that there must be people who read them, just as the old astrologers must have followers enough, at any rate, to keep the pot boiling.

The chief drawback to meddling with magic is that you never, apparently, know when to stop; crystal gazing is only one of the stations on the way to calling spirits from the vasty deep and practising other black arts.

We are glad to see that the Athenæum, while not refusing to admit there may be something in telepathy and crystal gazing wants, for instance, to have a little more 'tele' in the telepathy. In reviewing 'Thought Transference,' by Mr. W. Thomas, our contemporary properly objects to much value being attached to experiments in transmitting thought which had to travel a distance of only seven feet! That one individual can in some way influence the thoughts of another at a distance is almost certain. Bacon somewhere in his works refers to the possibility of a man in England being switched on mentally to thought lines connecting him with a man on the other side of the world. Izaak Walton in his Life of Dr. Donne gives a most interesting account of Donne's experience of extreme anxiety about his wife's health by reason of a vision of her when he was in Paris and she in London, it afterwards being proved that at the very time she was at death's door. Walton draws a charming analogy for minds attuned to respond to the same emotion though separated by distance from the fact that if two violins in the same room are attuned to the same note, a faint echo of the music played on one will be heard from the other although untouched.

If booksellers were responsible for what they sold to their customers in the way butchers and bakers and chemists are responsible, it is probable that the sale of many books would be restricted. What good can come out of crystal-gazing, or out of books on that and similar mental freak subjects? The answer may be that it is too much to expect good out of everything—that to get at the truth is something, and you cannot get at that by merely ignoring things. But our limited experience of works of the nature of 'Thought Transference' and 'Crystal Gazing' is that if they are guides to truth they are utterly unsatisfactory ones. Perhaps it is unreasonable to expect that books on supernatural subjects should give natural explanations of them. No one could fairly claim Mr. Andrew Lang as a follower of any crystal gazing professor, although it is evident that he thinks there may be something in it, and indeed suggests that some 'official professor of psychology' might make experiments. If the crystal could be made into a touchstone for ascertaining things useful to be known—for instance, as to whether a novel offered to a publisher would be a success or not—its cult would be, at any rate, more useful.

In the meantime the catalogues of the secondhand booksellers will doubtless continue to retain 'occultism,' 'second sight,' 'telepathy,' 'spiritualism,' &c., among their subject headings, for the amusement of those who have nothing better to do than try to see which is truth and which is untruth in this curious literature.

On another page we give some extracts from the very pleasant article 'About Booksellers' contributed by 'Claudius Clear' to the British Weekly. We agree with him as to the great interest and fascination that there is in a large and varied collection of second-hand books, and indeed in any little old second-hand bookshop. It is wonderful how the hours fly away on, for instance, a wet day at the seaside town if there is a second-hand bookseller's shop. The only drawback is that some of the proprietors seem to think that fresh air is as bad for books as sea air is for cigars; but a musty, dusty smell is quite an unnecessary atmosphere in which to enjoy the aftermath of literature. By the way, we are very glad to see that 'Claudius' hints that he may give us more of his reminiscences in connection with booksellers.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Heinemann announces for publication on the 4th inst. a pocket edition of R. L. Stevenson's 'St. Ives,' uniform with the pocket editions in large type published by Messrs. Cassell and Messrs. Chatto & Windus. In its new and attractive form this brilliant story is certain to find a very large circle of readers.

Messrs. Greening & Co. have in preparation a society novel by a new author, Mr. H. C. F. Castleman, who has already had some success as a singer on the concert platform and in musical comedy. 'The Eleventh Commandment' is the title of Mr. Castleman's novel, and we understand it is considerably above the average of first novels.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. are about to publish a book which should be of more than ordinary interest, for it is a life and letters of the only Italian queen who ever shared the English throne, the consort of James II., Queen Mary of Modena. The great majority of the original documents used in this book, such as the Queen's own letters and the despatches and letters of her contemporaries, have never before appeared in English. Martin Haile is the author, and the title of the book is 'Queen Mary of Modena: her Life and Letters.'

Alston Rivers will publish Mr. E. Anson More's new book, 'A Captain of Men,' on September 13. The scene of this book is laid at Tyre, in the period of Phœnician pre-eminence in the commerce of the world, and the incidents are exciting and original.

On the 4th inst. Mr. Heinemann will also issue three more volumes of his 'Favourite Classics': 'Selected Poems of Matthew Arnold,' in two volumes, edited and with an introduction by Mr. Arthur Waugh; and 'Selected Poems of S. T. Coleridge,' edited and with an introduction by Mr. Ernest Hartley Coleridge. Each of the volumes contains a photogravure frontispiece, and, assuredly, no more suitable companions for the river and the Lakes can be found than these two poets. The Coleridge volume will contain some hitherto unpublished poems.

What is the most difficult shot? In the Badminton Magazine of Sports and Pastimes for September this question is answered by the Marquess of Granby, Lords De Grey, Walsingham, Ashburton, and Westbury, Prince Victor Duleep Singh, the Hons. A. E. Gathorne-Hardy and Harry Stonor, Major Arthur Acland-Hood, Messrs. R. H. Rimington Wilson, F. E. R. Fryer, Reginald G. Hargreaves, T. S. Pearson Gregory, Arthur Portman, and H. W. Gilbey. The editor is to be congratulated upon bagging these famous shots just at the beginning of the shooting season.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton announce the immediate publication of a new novel by Joseph C. Lincoln, entitled 'Partners of the Tide.'

Mr. Charles Mosley, editor of Nature Study, has arranged an edition of 'White's Selborne' for students, in which the whole of the letters are classified under subjects giving the reader all that the naturalist wrote on one topic under one head. As the subjects will be arranged alphabetically, the work will be one of reference as well as for reading consecutively. Mr. Elliot Stock is to publish the book during the coming season.

Mr. Heinemann will publish next week Miss Emma Brooke's new novel, 'Susan Wooed and Susan Won,' also Mr. Bram Stoker's new novel, 'The Man.' The story deals with the fortunes of a young lady, brought up with advanced ideas, who is eventually brought to see that the old ways are the best after all.

The Granville Press, Ltd., will publish on the 6th inst. a volume entitled "Pannell's Reference Book," which is intended to supply the long-felt need of a complete book of reference in a single handy volume, a book that can be easily and readily consulted on any question arising in ordinary reading or conversation, or for information on everyday topics and subjects of general interest. It will include an English Dictionary, a Guide to the English Language, a Medical Guide, a Legal Guide, an Educational Guide, a Commercial Guide, and a Dictionary of General Information, the last named supplying for all ordinary purposes the place of the many-volumed Encyclopædia.

Among anticipated commemorations of Nelson's year, probably one of the most striking, from the point of view of historical novelty, will be a very thorough re-investigation of the life-drama of Emma, Lady Hamilton, by Mr. Walter Sichel.

The 'Life,' which will be issued by Messrs. Constable early in October, will be illustrated from a hitherto unknown oil-sketch by Romney, and by other portraits, all of which will be reproduced now for the first time.

Messrs. Greening & Co. are about to publish a cheap shilling edition of Mr. Cosmo Hamilton's merry story, 'The Danger of Innocence.'

What Thomas Hardy has done in literature for Wessex, Mrs. A. C. Inchbold is doing for Sussex. Her first story won for her comparison with Hardy; in fact, their methods and sympathies have many points of resemblance. She portrays with much realism and fascination the morals, manners, characters, and dialect of Sussex folk. Readers of 'Princess Feather' will be glad to learn that a new story from her pen, entitled 'The Letter Killeth,' is expected to be ready early this month.

Subscribers to the 'Victoria History of the Counties of England' will have noted with pleasure the recent appearance of the second volume of 'Cumberland.' We learn that the first volume of 'Buckingham' will also be published in the next few days, and that, among others, volumes of the following counties will appear during the autumn: 'Derby,' 'Durham,' 'Lancashire,' 'Somerset,' 'Worcester,' 'Sussex,' 'Berkshire.' The first of the genealogical volumes, which will also be ready this autumn, is 'Northampton.'

The Baroness Orczy's new novel, 'The Beloved of the Gods,' will be published immediately. It is said to be a tale of adventure, something in the Rider Haggard vein. The scene of the Baroness Orczy's next book will be laid in Hungary. This may be expected soon after Christmas.

Messrs. Skeffington will publish this month a book of readings for the aged, by Dr. A. G. Mortimer, under the title 'It Ringeth to Evensong.' Among their new autumn sermons are the following: 'Day by Day Duty,' by H. J. Wilmot Buxton; 'The Plain Man's Life,' by Canon C. Moor; 'Walking Circumspectly,' by Rev. J. A. Beaumont; and 'The Human Nature of the Saints,' by Dean Hodges.

MESSRS. WARD, LOCK & CO.'S ANNUAL OUTING.

On Saturday last the employees of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd., held their annual sports and outing, the venue being again Court Farm, Upper Warlingham.

The principal and praiseworthy object of these gatherings is to promote and encourage social intercourse between the employees themselves and their employers.

The directors show their hearty sympathy with the movement by not only largely contributing to the prizes for the races, but also by attending and entering enthusiastically into the sports and games.

Carriages for the party were reserved on the 1.40 from London Bridge, and immediately on arrival the programme of races was gone through, producing some keen sport, especially for those who were jealous for the honour of their department.

Full justice was done to the substantial meat tea supplied by Mr. Hinton, after which the games of cricket, lawn-tennis, and push-ball were indulged in and created much pleasure and amusement.

A most enjoyable day was brought to a conclusion with the presentation of the prizes by Mr. W. G. Lock. Short speeches were also made by Mr. R. D. Lock and Mr. Leslie Lock, and the hearty reception accorded them showed how much the employees appreciate the kindness and goodwill of the directors.

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. Spencer C. Blackett has resigned his position as manager of Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd., and Mr. B. W. Willett, who has been for some years assistant-manager, has been appointed to the post.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS IN CANADA.

THE NEW $300 LICENSE FEE IN QUEBEC.

MESSRS. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, of Edinburgh, write: 'We think you will be interested in the letter on the tax on commercial travellers in Canada in the Glasgow Herald which we send you.' We are much obliged to Messrs. Oliphant, and may hazard the guess that the writer of the letter is the member of their firm who is, or was recently, travelling in Canada, as we mentioned in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR. We give some extracts from his interesting communication. —ED. P.C.

THE QUEBEC ACT.

I happened to be at Rivière du Loup on July 20, when the Quebec Act came into force, and in discussing it with a commercial traveller from London, England, with whom I had journeyed on the 'Ocean Limited' from Moncton, New Brunswick, he told me that he had been assured that there was some way round the Act, and that few British commercial travellers would be required to pay the $300 fee before calling on customers in the French province. His idea was that it would be possible for a representative of a British or American firm in Montreal or Quebec, who was duly appointed as resident agent, to appoint the travellers representing the firm as sub-agents, and that by this plan the Act could be evaded. He was so sure that this could be done that a couple of days later, when I reached the city of Quebec, I went to the Parliament House to make inquiries. There I was given a copy of the Act, and from a careful reading of it I realised that my travelling companion from London had been wrongly informed, and that he was labouring under a mistake if he imagined that he could do business without paying the fee by the device he described to me.

The Act is an amendment of or addition to an Act passed in 1900 for the collection of provincial revenue, under which license fees have for five years been charged auctioneers, pawnbrokers, pedlers, circus men, and the proprietors of billiard parlours. It is essential that the wording of the new Act should be known by all British manufacturing firms and wholesale houses which have hitherto done business in the French province, and accordingly I am quoting the clauses which affect 'foreign' commercial travellers in full, with the remark that they apply against travellers from England just as much as against travellers from Massachusetts or New Hampshire, and that the liquor business is exempt from the new Act because there is another Quebec revenue law dealing with liquor licenses. The clauses are as follow:

'Any person not residing in the province, who is desirous of acting as a commercial traveller, by soliciting or taking orders for or selling goods, wares, or merchandise, other than intoxicating liquors, or by advertising or offering such goods for sale, by sample, catalogue, or price list, for a person, firm, or corporation, having no place of business in Canada, shall first obtain a license therefor from the collector of provincial revenue in the district in which he begins his operations in the province.

'Such license is granted for one year, and expires on the first day of the month of May subsequent to its issue.'

HOW IT AFFECTS TRAVELLERS.

'Every person not residing in the province who acts as a commercial traveller by soliciting or taking orders for or selling goods, wares, or merchandise other than intoxicating liquors, or by advertising or offering such goods for sale, by sample, catalogue, or price-list, for a person, firm, or corporation having no place of business in Canada, without being the holder of a license for that purpose then in force, is liable to a fine of not more than $1,000 and not less than $500 for each contravention.

'Every such person shall show his license to any collector of provincial revenue, or to any person authorised in writing by a collector of provincial revenue, and in default of so doing such person shall be held to have no license, and is punishable accordingly.

'No commercial traveller licensed as aforesaid shall lend his license to another, under a penalty of $300 for each offence.'

The Act further provides, as has already been stated, that 'for each license for a person not residing in the province to act as commercial traveller for a person, firm, or corporation having no place of business in Canada the license fee shall be $300.

Mr. James Sargant, secretary of the Commercial Travellers' Association of Canada, one-third of whose 7,000 members are much hampered by the new Quebec law, has been in correspondence with the Deputy-Minister of Justice at Ottawa concerning its disallowance by the Dominion Government. But Mr. A. Power, the Deputy-Minister, who was acting in Mr. Fitzpatrick's absence, was noncommittal. 'Until the matter is laid before His Excellency the Governor-General in Council,' he wrote, 'it would not be proper for this Department to express an opinion as to its provisions. I may say, however, that the question of the validity of the Act will receive the earliest possible consideration.'

EFFORTS FOR MODIFICATION.

About the time the Deputy Minister at Ottawa wrote this letter, questions were addressed to the Colonial Secretary in the House of Commons at Westminster, suggesting that the British Government should take immediate steps to secure the disallowance of the Act in the interest of British commercial travellers, who come in large numbers to Canada every year, and who have built up a considerable trade in Montreal and Quebec. Action without loss of time was suggested in the British Parliament, because many travellers leave Scotland and England for the autumn trade in the Dominion. All that Mr. Lyttelton could answer, as readers of the Parliamentary news in the Glasgow Herald will recall, was that, while he knew of the enactment, he was unacquainted with its exact provisions. But he promised to cable the Governor-General at Ottawa for a copy of the Quebec law, and some definite statement is expected in Canada from the Colonial Secretary to the House of Commons before the present session of Parliament comes to an end. Much interest centres in Mr. Lyttelton's promised statement, because as the law now stands a commercial traveller representing several firms and handling several lines of goods must pay the $300 fee in respect of each firm represented, and as a consequence there is just now much dislocation of business.

A PROTECTIONIST WAVE.

This is an impracticable course for thousands of British and American firms, whose travellers are of the army of 14,000 commercial travellers constantly on the go in the Dominion, and there is a feeling among the travellers who are worst hit by the Act that at bottom it is really another exemplification of the Protectionist wave that just now is sweeping over Canada. A little while ago the 'Made in Canada' movement was started. Later on there was developed a 'Made in Halifax' movement. It broke out in connection with a little shirt factory there.

Prince Edward Island has had a commercial travellers' tax since 1894. It produces a revenue of about $8,000 a year, and the province needs the money. The tax, however, is only $20 a year, and last year a similar tax was imposed by the Legislature of British Columbia. In Prince Edward Island and British Columbia the commercial traveller's license fee bears some relative proportion to the licence fees charged resident traders. But the Quebec fee of $300 is enormously out of proportion to the licence fees charged auctioneers and other business men, and the high figure at which it has been placed suggests a spirit of provincial Protectionism rather than an effort to treat resident and non-resident business men on an equitable basis or to raise a fair amount of revenue from licence fees payable by both. It is admitted, in fact, at Quebec that it is a Protectionist and not a revenue scheme—aimed chiefly against American manufacturers' travellers, although, as the clauses I have quoted show, no exceptions are made for British travellers.

ABOUT BOOKSELLERS.

FROM early years I have been in close relations with the bookselling fraternity. My father was a bookman, and emphatically a book-buyer. To his remote home in a Scottish village came constant letters and catalogues from booksellers in Aberdeen and London. It was always a red-letter day when the post brought a catalogue. Of the catalogues we received, I remember particularly those of F. Edwards, Marylebone, and Thomas Baker, Goswell Street. Mr. Edwards's catalogue was most to my liking, as containing many books in general literature, but my father, whose tastes were pre-eminently theological, preferred Mr. Baker's. Whether the Baker firm is still in existence, I do not know, but it must have been a great firm in these days. The catalogues were particularly rich in volumes of Roman Catholic literature, but they embraced theology in general. On the evening of the day in which the catalogues arrived, we arranged the orders that should be sent. It was found safe to calculate that not more than one-third of the books ordered would arrive, and when this calculation proved wrong, as sometimes happened, considerable abstinence had to be practised. But it was with the Aberdeen booksellers mainly that my father dealt, with those who sold new books and those who sold secondhand books. There was a distinction between the two. Of the secondhand booksellers I remember in particular one who has been long dead. He was named Sandy Smith, and he was an old bachelor, inhabiting a house in the Gallowgate. That house was filled in every room with books. Sandy, who was a dry, withered, yellow little man, always dressed in rusty black, seemed to cook for himself, and to be independent of women. How he got his stock I do not know, but his prices were so low, and therefore so tempting, that my father used to reproach himself bitterly after every visit to his place. He was specially rich in the complete works of authors, and theologians would run easily to twenty or thirty volumes. Another secondhand bookseller, I think in Broad Street, was Alexander Simpson. Mr. Simpson was much more a man of the world, but he, too, contrived to sell his wares at prices miraculously low. Of the new booksellers, the chief are happily still surviving, and I trust they will not be offended if I name them—Mr. Alexander Milne and Mr. James Murray, honoured citizens of Aberdeen. They were to my father much more than business men. They were his dear and trusted friends, and nothing made him happier than his long intercourse with both.

Aberdeen, as I remember it, was full of secondhand books, and they were sold, unless I am completely mistaken, at fabulously low prices. The great place for cheap books was the Market, where perhaps a dozen dealers had stalls.

But Aberdeen was specially distinguished by the handsome establishments of the general booksellers. They had fine shops, large stocks, and apparently a very flourishing trade. The booksellers themselves were generally men of much amenity and accomplishment, taking an excellent place in the city.

There came a time when for three years Elgin was my metropolis. I found there an ideal bookseller to whom I owe much. He has now found his true place as an eminent publisher in Edinburgh. He was himself, like nearly all the booksellers I have ever had to do with, a literary man, and was particularly skilful in selecting new books for his library. At that period Professor Saintsbury was in Elgin, and he was known to the town as Rector of the Academy. But whatever official position Professor Saintsbury may occupy, one knows that he must be always the busy, erudite, indefatigable reader. Next Edinburgh came to be my book centre, and a better could not be imagined. Edinburgh is a true metropolis of literature, a city where the bookman must always be at home. It would be invidious and indeed impossible to enumerate the Edinburgh booksellers of the 'seventies. From Waverley station to the Caledonian station there was a line of magnificent shops, and the contemplation of the windows made a journey down Princes Street a matter sometimes of hours. Edinburgh was also famous for its secondhand booksellers, as indeed it has always been. There were men of strong character and of high erudition among the bibliopoles. You could get direction in any branch of inquiry. There were famous publishing houses and printing houses, and men renowned in literature could be seen in the streets. Perhaps, however, the town was not so homely as Aberdeen was. Edinburgh is a proud and splendid city. Aberdeen, in my days, was perhaps in her heart complacent, but outwardly not boastful. Of my experience with booksellers and publishers in Edinburgh I may one day write a chapter.

Then came London. From the days of my first visit to the capital I have been familiar with a good many bookshops, but there has been a great change since the destruction of Holywell Street. That may have been justified, but the disappearance of the old Booksellers Row has been a distinct impoverishment of my week. Every Wednesday afternoon I was wont to walk from Hatton Garden to Holywell Street. I began at the first bookshop, and carefully inspected the stock on both sides, seasoning the time with occasional conversation. In this occupation I had some successes, many disappointments, and endless pleasure. It took me, as a rule, about two hours, and then I finished at the magnificent shop of Messrs. Denny, now removed to the Strand. There I had a particular friend who knew precisely what I wanted, and put me swiftly in possession of the latest book news How he contrived to know so well what was in the new books I could never understand. He must have had a gift of divination. I scarcely ever knew any good book in the publishers' lists that you could not find there, and I was wont to depart in peace as one rises from a feast.

Two red-letter days were spent in Dublin. It was there that the heroine of bookselling, the beautiful Constantia Grierson, the editress of 'Tacitus,' spent her brief life of twenty-seven years. I do not know whether Dublin retains its glory, but at that time, more than twenty years ago, the book-lover could be gratified to his heart's content. There was one place, in particular, and that the establishment of Messrs. Hodges, which was ideal. Then I think of some days in Birmingham with its memories of Baskerville. If Constantia Grierson was the romantic figure in the printing trade, Baskerville comes next to her. The story of his struggle is one of attaching interest. The exquisiteness of his taste will be more and more recognised. There are no books to my mind so beautiful as the best of the Baskerville books. Like many men of genius, Baskerville was anything but a good business man. His ideals were too high for calculations, and he was independent to a fault. I wish there were space to quote the strange epitaph which he wrote for his tomb in which he claimed justly to be 'A Friend to the Liberties of Mankind.'—From an article by Claudius Clear in the British Weekly.

MENTION THE 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

A NEW THING IN THE WORLD.

I DO not propose for a moment to invite you to blink the fact that our huge Anglo-Saxon array of producers and readers—and especially our vast cis-Atlantic multitude—presents production uncontrolled, production untouched by criticism, unguided, unlighted, uninstructed, unashamed, on a scale that is really a new thing in the world. It is all the complete reversal of any proportion, between the elements, that was ever seen before. It is the biggest flock straying without shepherds, making its music without a sight of the classic crook, beribboned or other, without a sound of the sheepdog's bark—wholesome note, once in a way—that has ever found room for pasture. The very opposite has happened from what might have been expected to happen. The shepherd's have diminished as the flock has increased—quite as if number and quantity had got beyond them, or even as if their charge had turned, by some uncanny process, to a pack of ravening wolves. Let us none the less assume that we may still find two or three of the fraternity hiding under a hedge or astride of some upper limb of a tree; let us even assume that if we set rightly, if we set tactfully about it, we may establish again some friendly connection with them.

Putting, on this basis, then, all our heads together, we may become aware of an intelligent gratitude, deep within our breasts, to any author who consents to fit with a certain fulness of presence and squareness of solidity into one of the conscious categories of our attention. There are literary figures in plenty that scarce fill out even the smaller of these critical receptacles; there are others, on the contrary, that almost strain the larger to breaking. It is to these latter that interested contemplation most fondly attaches itself—to that degree, really, that there seems, on any good occasion, more and more about them to be said. They have the great sign that their immediate presence causes our ideas, whether about life in general or about the art they have exemplified in particular, to revive and breathe again, to multiply, more or less to swarm. I must profess that no Novelist—since we are by common consent confining our attention to that great Company—no Novelist, to my sense, so rewards consideration as he or she (and I emphasize the liberality of my 'she') who offers the critical spirit this opportunity for a certain ntensity of educative practice. The lesson of Balzac, whom we thus march straight up to, is that he offers it as no other members of the company can pretend to do.—From a lecture on 'The Lesson of Balzac,' by Henry James.

A STUPENDOUS COPYRIGHT FRAUD.

Charles Malherbe, librarian of the Paris Opéra, has, according to the Daily Telegraph, made a strange discovery regarding Donizetti's copyrights in France. He met in Italy some time ago the grandnephews of the composer, Gaetano and Joseph Donizetti. In conversation he happened to say that he supposed the performances of their granduncle's operas in France brought in a fair sum to his heirs. The two Donizettis looked surprised, and answered that they had never been paid royalties on any French representations. M. Malherbe has made inquiries, and now believes this statement to be correct. Donizetti died in 1848, and the copyright of his works, according to French law, remained in force in France until 1898. The Society of Dramatic Authors and Composers undertakes to levy all royalties on all French performances. But by some extraordinary accident it is stated that this has not been done in the case of Donizetti's rightful heirs since 1870.

'It appears that in that year the composer's heirs heard from someone, believed to be a clerk of the society, that "copyright royalties were no longer paid in France," and were satisfied with this statement, troubling no more about the question afterward. Nevertheless, these royalties were regularly paid by the society. The conclusion is that they were drawn by the clerk in question. The latter, if this story be true, has therefore been thriving for twenty-eight years, until the copyright lapsed, on the proceeds of the performances of Donizetti's operas in France. The sum he is alleged to have thus pocketed amounts to tens of thousands of pounds. One can readily imagine that the author's royalties of about 5 per cent. on every representation of "La Favorita," "Lucia di Lammermoor," "La Figlia di Regimento," &c., from 1870 to 1898 in France must reach a large total. The heirs of the writers of the libretti of the operas have duly received their share of the rights, whereas the heirs of the composer have, it is alleged, been frustrated of their due all that time.'

THE AMERICAN TOURIST AND THE EUROPEAN SIGHT.

All my life I have read stories of Americans abroad and have refused to believe most of them. But I have returned from my own first trip across the Atlantic a convert to Charles Battell Loomis and to the theory that the American tourist is among the most interesting sights to be found on the Continent of Europe.

A New England business man crossed on the steamer with me; as soon as he landed, the Italian air seemed to bring out all over him, like a measles rash, the most rampant Americanism I ever saw. He gave himself the greatest inconvenience to procure three cigars in order to smuggle them into Naples, a thing which he afterwards discovered was within the law; in Rome he boasted that he had 'sneaked' his kodak into St. Peter's against the regulations, although he did not want to photograph anything. In short, his one object in life seemed to be to cheat the Italian Government and the Italian shopkeepers, whose acknowledged prerogative it is, as all right-minded tourists will agree, to eke out a miserable existence by cheating us.

The New Englander soon passed beyond my ken, for I was making a leisurely trip, and he, as you may easily surmise from the glimpse I have given of him, was of the class who waste no time in quiet contemplation. The next oddity I encountered was in Florence in the shape of a countrywoman from Florida, who, on being asked if she had been to Santa Croce, responded with interest:

"No: what's that?'

'Santa Croce is the church where Galileo was buried.' she was told.

'Galileo, oh yes!' Then, with the air of summoning a recollection from a long distance, 'Galileo? Why, of course! Pygmalion and Galileo: you always hear of them together. Now, who was Pygmalion?'

I see I have omitted mention of the girl in Rome who lost her luncheon because she rashly arranged to meet her party for that meal at the foot of Michael Angelo's Moses in the Vatican: I say rashly, because, had she consulted her guide-book, she would have discovered that Michael Angelo's Moses was to be found in the church of San Pietro in Vincoli, at the opposite end of the city from the Vatican.

In Paris I met a party of delightful young persons, brothers and sisters from Boston. Every evening they appeared at dinner dressed to go out, and on inquiry it proved that they were testing solemnly in turn every café and vaudeville in the city made famous or infamous by fiction. One night it was the Moulin Rouge, followed by Maxim's; the next night, the Bal Bullier. I suppose I looked a little shocked at this, for they hastened to explain: 'Of course we don't understand a word, but the dancing is good. And they are such famous places, and we may never get another chance!'

It was an unobtrusive looking American who stood in the long corridor of the Louvre before the Murillo Annunciation when a personally conducted party made its appearance. The American stood where he was when the group halted, in the hope, I suppose, of picking up a few gems in art criticism from the little French guide who succeeded, in his disquisition on painting, in making a tremendous noise. But the guide must have felt that my friend was a jarring note in his admiring audience, for he suddenly stopped, turned and fixed him with a beady eye, and shouted:

'Are you of zis partee?'

'No, monsieur.'

'Ah-h-h! Zen you must avay! Zis is a personally conducted partee.'

'Pardon, monsieur,' murmured my imperturbable American as he bowed himself away, 'I thought it was a dog-fight.' And as his sauntering departure was followed by the infuriated gesticulations of the little guide and the amused laughter of the rest, I rejoiced for the first time in Europe in an American peculiarity.

But it was not until I boarded the steamer coming home that I met a thoroughly typical American. I asked him how long he had been in England, and he told me that much to his disgust he had had to stay a week.

'I landed last Saturday, and my business ought not to have taken me but three days,' he said. 'But I had to interview an English board of directors, and if you have ever tried that you know it is the slowest job on record.'

'Do you often make these flying trips?' I asked.

'Oh, no,' he answered. 'I used to. But now I come over only about four times a year.'

It is curious, this question of types; we pass by ninety-nine of our fellow-countrymen who have been born and bred here, and suddenly descend upon the hundredth, and label him typical for no more obvious reason than because he differs from the others. So in meekness of spirit I recognise in this man on the steamer the typical American business man as he figures in tradition and the modern novel. Yet I have lived in America all my life and never met any one like him before.'—By 'One of the oldest and most truly original American Writers of Fiction' in the Atlantic Monthly.

A STUDY IN POLITICAL ECONOMY.

A belated contribution (says the New York Nation) to the controversy over Dr. Karl Bücher's 'Der Deutsche Buchhandel und die Wissenschaft' comes to hand in a pamphlet bearing the title 'Das Buch im Strom des Verkehrs,' by Dr. W. Koehler-Gera. The author characterises it as 'a study in political economy,' and treats in it of such topics as the Economic Importance of Literary Production, the Economic Basis of Literary Culture, Analysis of Literary Economic Value, &c. A chapter on the Libraries and the Book Industry deals largely with the beginnings of the book trade in Alexandria and the Roman Empire; the author touches also on the possible service of libraries as literary bureaus of information, especially through book exhibitions. The fifth chapter, entitled 'Das Reichsbarsortiment,' contains a practical proposal to solve the difficulties that beset the book trade. The author, who is himself a publisher, proposes a further development of the cash-jobbing houses (Barsortimente), the one branch of the trade of which the soundness had not been attacked during the controversy; he proposes, in a word, the establishment of a large central jobbing-house on a co-operative basis as an agency of the organised trade, with branches in various literary centres. Dr. Koehler is confident that organised effort of this kind will go farther towards solving the book trade problem than any coercive measures. These, he says, 'are of doubtful value in the economic life, and, as disturbing elements, often work against productivity.'

An association with men happy in each other's recognitions—possessing cheerful faces, healthy, robust constitutions, and minds, from active exercise and frequent rebuffs, repellent and superior to annoyance and temporary misfortune—bland, courteous, and free with yet perfectly independent of each other—constant collision with contrariety of character—continued excitement—a perpetual change of town, object, and scenery—and a table bountifully provided—have all a tendency to dispel gloom and cheer the dejected, Were it not for these, dull enough would the road occasionally prove; for it has its drawbacks and discomfortings in an endless variety of forms—such as the want of the knowledge of character requisite to enable a man to be all things to all men—a confidence at once becoming and manly without being rude, fulsome, or offensive—a tact to enforce sales without boring—the superior advantages of some houses, towns, and localities over others — the disadvantages of uncongenial seasons—the temporary absence of customers from home—the interference of market days—the occasional turn-outs of operatives—derangement of the money markets—fluctuations of imported commodities, or general depression of commerce, and consequent flatness of trade and inability of clients to purchase—the chagrin which all right-minded men feel after making a bad debt—the visitings to London and the Markets—the excessive competition—the ties of friendship—and advantages of a connection which others enjoy in a superior degree to ourselves—the misery (from causes unavoidable) of one unprofitable town, or a first and second by-day—the probable lameness of illness of a horse—or detention for want of a conveyance: these, with innumerable other evils, are all discouraging to the inexperienced—aye, and the experienced too—and require time and nerve to enable a man to bear them with a stoical indifference. They are all surmountable, however, if a young man possess ability and a determined resolution to rise above their influence. And he will not infrequently find, that the greatest evils to be overcome in his new occupation are the inherent principles of depravity deep-rooted in his own nature. For subject by sudden and unexpected collision, as all commercial men are, to incessant exercise, and assailed, as he will find himself at every turn, by inducements to a deviation from the strict path of rectitude and duty—being for the moment as it were an irresponsible agent, without immediate governance, possessing time and money and opportunity for indulgence—ushered daily and hourly into novel and exciting allurements—enchanted by fashion and face—surrounded, occasionally, by careless, lax, volatile individuals with whom he associates and in whose eyes (wanting the resolution to resist, forgetting the pernicious evils arising out of even a single deviation from correct conduct) he is anxious to stand well; the influence of these evils, combined with others which beset a man, will require all the moral force and advantages of education and intellect to be brought into exercise to overcome the pressure from within and without. Not possessing the capability of such exercise, no man can really stand well, rise to the first position, or be looked up to and upon as a man and a gentleman. Neither can he enjoy an appellation so desirable as either for a man commercially engaged. To be a tradesman and man of business will always secure an engagement, with a stipend satisfactorily remunerative, and justly entitling the holder to regard himself as representing the tria juncta in uno.

A GORMANDISER—MR. BEGGARLY SPIFFER.

Rose and Crown, Wisbeach, January 23, 1840, 5 P.M.—While six of us were sitting down comfortably to the enjoyment of an excellent dinner, in stalked a mountain of flesh, enveloped in camlet, covered with a shaggy cap, and, addressing us in a broad Northern vernacular, said (the only redeeming point in his behaviour while I saw him) 'Weel, gentlemen, hoo dou you do to neet? it's varry cowld.' In an instant all eyes were riveted upon the fresh arrival; those cognisant of the man annoyed at being compelled to associate with such a being, and those in ignorance of his person and character wondering what he would really turn out to be like, when unrolled and unbuttoned—a work occupying no brief portion of time; for his superabundance of flesh is an opponent of speed, and he weighs, without his garments—or, as a knight of the cleaver would say, 'sinking the offal'—something like twenty stone.

OBITUARY.

WE regret to record the death of Mr. Norman Dalziel Warne, the youngest son of the late Mr. Frederick Warne, the well-known publisher. He took an active part in the business, commencing with the firm on his leaving Charterhouse, 1885, and becoming one of the partners from the year 1895. The funeral took place at St. George's, Bloomsbury, at 11.30 A.M. on Tuesday the 29th ult.

SIR THEODORE MARTIN.

THIS fine veteran is still active and cheerful, and bright and young in everything but years, at his pleasant home in Denbighshire. It does people good to see such a man. The country will be delighted if he should still use his pen.—E. M. J.

Notices of Books

From Mr. Sidney Appleton, 25 Bedford Street, W.C.—' "The Doctor Says," a Book of Advice for the Household, with Practical Hints for the Preservation of Health and the Prevention of Disease.' The author of this volume has at least this good quality, that he has made his treatise interesting to read and at the same time instructive. We may have our own opinion, not altogether commendatory, of the so-called advantages to be derived from the present-day diffusion of health knowledge; but we cheerfully admit that from the pages of a book such as this it is possible to gather much serviceable information in regard to the minor ailments of human existence, and that on the whole the anonymous author has been discreet in the advice and treatment proffered. The coloured frontispiece, with its reproduction on the cover, is distinctly a mistake, since it detracts from the impression of substantiality that such a work, to be completely successful, should produce.

From Messrs. J. Baker & Son, Clifton.—'Poems New and Old,' by Marcus S. C. Rickards. Mr. Rickards comes to us as an old and highly esteemed friend. It is many years now since we first had the pleasure of expressing our appreciation of his versifying powers in these columns, and during the interval we have received numerous volumes, the outcome of his poetic fancy. The last may certainly not be accounted the least noteworthy of the series, though it contains perhaps rather too many reproduced pieces to be altogether to our liking. These, however, have been considerably revised, in most cases decidedly adding to their merits. Of the new poems, the following, taken from 'A Seaside Soliloquy,' may sufficiently serve as a sample:

> 'And as the heavenly bodies charm the sea,
> While earth attracts it also, hence the tides;
> So, courted by two influences, we
> In fluctuation take alternate sides.
> The spirit yielding to the mastery
>   Of either, wins repose,
> And in subjection to the Power on high
>   Serene contentment knows.
> But better far perpetual unrest
>   Of tidal rise and falling,
> Than the ignoble stillness of the breast
>   Enslaved of Earth's enthralling.'

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd., we have received several moderately priced educational works which are in all respects excellently adapted for school purposes. Among these are Matthew Arnold's 'Sohrab and Rustum,' edited by W. Keith Leask, M.A. ('Blackie's English Classics'), 'Blackie's New Concentric Arithmetics, Part II.' by D. W. Cowan, M.A., and 'Le Blanc et le Noir,' by Voltaire, edited by H. H. Horton, B.A. ('Blackie's Little French Classics').

From Messrs. A. Brown & Sons, Ltd.—'Mel. B. Spurr: his Life, Work, Writings, and Recitations,' by Harry A. Spurr. The publication of this volume is somewhat ill-advised. The late Mr. Spurr was a well-known man in his own walk of life—possessed of intellectual attainments perhaps not vouchsafed to every public entertainer—but that the record of his experiences, the pictorial representation of his various 'make-ups,' and the merits of his verse are worthy of general recognition may be questioned. The book, we have little doubt, will be warmly appreciated by the many friends and acquaintances of Mr. Spurr, who recognised his many social qualities, but we are afraid by the ordinary public it will be held in faint esteem. Truth to tell, Mr. Spurr was not a John Parry, a Corney Grain, or a George Grossmith.

* In 1847 Joseph Masters, of Aldersgate Street London, published for the author, Throne Crick, of Leicester, a little work entitled 'Sketches from the Diary of a Commercial Traveller,' from which we give some extracts.—ED. P C.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. — 'The Tenant of Wildfell Hall' and 'Agnes Grey.' With the two volumes containing these stories Messrs. Dent's especially neat, artistically produced edition of the novels of the sisters Brontë is brought to a conclusion. Of the binding, printing, and papering of the production we have nothing but praise to offer. With the coloured illustrations of M. Edmund Dulac we are scarcely so greatly in sympathy. But we admit they are thoroughly in harmony with modern-day requirements and are startling enough in their arrangements of position and colour to elicit the enthusiastic admiration of the advanced school.

From the same.—'Heroic and Patriotic Verse,' edited by Arthur Burrell, M.A. The selection of poems in this little volume may generally pass without question, though the inclusion of a portion of 'Gray's Elegy' is a little calculated to excite surprise. By contrast with Macaulay's 'Armada' and much of the frequently quoted verse of Shakespeare there would seem nothing particularly 'heroic' about the 'Elegy.' However, the book well serves its purposes as a manual for school use, and not the least of its recommendations are the clear printing and excellent paper.

From the same.—'Dent's First New German Book,' by Walter Rippmann and S. Alge. We have been a little amused by Mr. Rippmann's exhortation to juvenile readers at the commencement of this volume of 'Dent's Modern Language Series'—it savours a little of the bathing man's invitation to trembling childhood to enjoy the felicities of the awe-inspiring sea; but of the value of the book, as an aid to the acquisition of the German language there can be no question. It is admirably compiled, clearly printed, and throughout shows the control of an experienced editor.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co., Ltd.—'Wisdom for the Holidays,' by T. W. H. Crosland. Why will Mr. Crosland be so rough-handed, so Philistine, in his humour? Occasionally he gets, so to speak, on the track of a really funny idea, follows it for a few strides, and then swings off, a prey to his own rough, unrefined ideals. We have no doubt that 'Wisdom for the Holidays' will please a large number of readers, but it is not a work, though amusing enough after a fashion, that any author of intellect would afterwards regard with complacency.

From Mr. John Long.—'Lifting the Veil, with other Lawn Tennis Sketches,' by F. W. Payn. Nearly half of this pamphlet consists of a review of 'Great Lawn Tennis Players: their Methods Illustrated,' by P. A. Vaile, with photographs by G. W. Beldam. None of these illustrations, we may mention, are reproduced in the present work. For active, enthusiastic lawn tennis players the book will no doubt possess considerable interest, but its attraction for the ordinary reader, we are afraid, will scarcely be so marked.

From Messrs. Luzac & Co.—'Chandra Shekhar,' a Bengali Novel by the late Rai Bahadoor Bankim Chandra Chatterjee, C.I.E., translated by Manmatha Nath Ray Chowdhury, of Santoch. There is an infinite amount of amusement in this story scarcely anticipated by the translator, who is vastly pleased with his work if one may judge from the frontispiece. And yet one is impelled rather to sympathy than stern criticism in regarding the efforts of the Eastern thus to bring his views within range of a European's comprehension. The lofty inflated language, to say nothing of the unfamiliarity with Western ways, is bound to excite laughter.

From Messrs. John Menzies & Co., Edinburgh and Glasgow.—'Horse-breaking,' by the Marchioness of Breadalbane. We like this little book. It is impossible not to recognise the genuine enthusiasm that pervades it. The authoress knows horses, has studied their peculiarities, and is conscious of their value in the domestic economy. Throughout her little work she evinces a highly practical acquaintance with her subject. In the all-important matters of driving, bitting, harnessing, and feeding horses, she has many valuable suggestions to offer. The book is more than commonly well illustrated, considering its size.

From Messrs. Morgan & Scott. — 'The Believer's Life: its Past, Present, and Future Tenses,' by Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. The author believes there are too many books published nowadays, but yet casts his volume with confidence before the public. In the Past Tense, we are told, is included the entire history and experience of the Sinner, previous to the act of saving faith, and up to the moment of his becoming a believer; in the Present Tense is embraced all his experience as a believer from the time of his acceptance of Christ to his departure from this life, or his translation at the Coming of the Lord; while in the Future Tense is comprehended all that lies beyond Death or the Coming of the Lord, in the Eternal State. These particulars will sufficiently indicate the character of the book, which is written with the force and clearness which we are led to expect from Dr. Pierson's reputation as a cleric.

From Mr. John Murray. — 'A Primer of Logic,' by E. E. Constance Jones. It seems a little singular to find a woman writing on a subject with which, as a rule, the sex are not usually credited with close acquaintance; and curiously enough the first sentence we light upon when opening the book, 'In classing there is a putting together of separate things which have like attributes,' &c., only increases this impression. But a deeper investigation of the book reveals that it has many admirable qualities, that it is thoughtfully conceived, well carried out, and that in its apparent simplicity it conveys much useful instruction not hitherto associated with works of this description. In short, it is a worthy addition to Mr. Murray's excellent series of Primers, and the papers included in the volume should especially be of service to those studying the subject for examination purposes. The explanatory index is also a feature deserving of mention.

From Messrs. Ralph, Holland & Co.—'The Essentials of French Grammar,' by Alfred Barriball, B.A. This is a reprint of a book first published in 1899. That it should have lived so long, coupled with the fact that it has more than once undergone the process of revival, testifies greatly in its favour. The author has had large experience in teaching, and the value of this special knowledge is very apparent.—We have also received from Messrs. Ralph, Holland & Co. 'The Educational Ideas of Pestalozzi and Fröbel,' by F. H. Hayward, M.A., a well-studied work that has now reached a second edition, revised and considerably enlarged, and the 'Graphic Algebra for Elementary and Intermediate Students, with Exercises and Answers,' by the Rev. J. Lightfoot, D.Sc., M.A., which supplies a very capable and lucid treatment of the subject.

From Messrs. Skeffington & Son.—'The Pilgrim of India: a Poem in Four Cantos.' India is a wide territory to depict in verse, and well may the author exclaim at the outset of his travels:

Oh! for one spark of that etherial fire
Which glowed within the Poet Pilgrim's mind.
Oh! that his genius might my verse inspire,
By Faith and Hope ennobled and refined.
That with a heart believing, glad, resigned,
I might from wrath and bitterness be free,
Not driven forth by scorn of Humankind
To sail abroad on Passion's stormy sea
For ever brooding like a dark misanthrope.

However, he gets on very creditably, all things considered, and his misanthropic spirit is scarcely so evident as we expected. No doubt he has some severe things to say about India and her customs, but the impression chiefly left on his mind is that the English governing classes are generally animated by a desire to do right, and to rule justly. This patriotic confidence in his own race and a fervent belief in Christianity may be said to constitute the most noticeable features of the book, albeit the author occasionally shows considerable fluency and skill as a verse writer.

From the same.—'Pro Christo: an Examination of Foundations,' by the Rev. H. W. Holder. The author of this volume was a figure of some importance in his day, and many readers of theological tendencies will no doubt remember his work 'John Wesley in Company with High Churchmen,' by an Old Methodist, published in 1869. In this he tells the story of one who abandoned Wesleyanism for what he conceived a broader, more comprehensive faith. The present volume was written in the last year of his life, during a time of much weakness and pain; but the force of his reasoning and his great desire to make the foundations on which the Christian religion is built up more intelligible to the ordinary worshipper are happily manifest as ever. It is a book to study and ponder over.

From Mr. Chas. J. Thynne. — 'Life of Giovanni Diodati, Genevese Theologian—Translator of the Italian Bible, 1607,' translated from the Italian by Maria Betts.' It is scarcely necessary to point out the interest attaching to this little volume. The work is founded on Avvocato Chiesi's 'Life of Diodati,' which on its part was but a condensed version of a previous 'Life' by Eugenio de Budé of Geneva, and the task of curtailment and translation seems to have been very creditably performed by Miss Betts.

From Messrs. G. Van Oest & Co., Paris and Brussels.—'Jacques Jordaens et son œuvre, par P. Buschmann, jun., with 44 full-page reproductions of the artist's paintings on art paper. An exhibition of Jordaens's works just opening at Antwerp is the immediate occasion for the publication of this work, and undoubtedly adds interest to it. Such a volume was, however, needed in any event, as till now there was no special volume devoted to the work of an artist who ranks with Rubens and Van Dyck, although generally less well known. This work, then, should reach all who are interested in art, and, by its wealth of illustrations, its well-chosen biography of the painter, and the critical and able analysis of his principal works, should do much to enlarge the general knowledge and obtain for Jordaens that place in the public estimation which he properly deserves.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co., Ltd.—'The King's Messenger,' by Louis Tracy. Captain Herbert Jerningham was a wonderful fellow who, as King's Messenger, found this world a veritable nightmare of adventures. No task was too delicate or too difficult for him to undertake successfully, and his experiences of a few months would suffice twenty ordinary mortals. Still, though we smile at all this afterwards, we read the stories with interest when they appeared in a magazine, and found them still interesting when collected in this volume. The author knows what his public wants and does not disappoint them; this series of adventure stories therefore amuse many readers.

New Editions.—Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons have added 'The Mill on the Floss,' by George Eliot, to their 'Sixpenny Classics.' It is a marvel of good printing, excellent paper, and attractive binding at the price.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

The relations—and the contrasts—between the 'Philistine' and the 'Artist' have supplied the theme for many novels, some of them notable ones. In most of them, however, a strong bias towards one side or the other has been exhibited. In 'A Servant of the Public'—which is not a story of the theatre, but of the private life of a famous actress—the author has tried to hold the balance true, and to show, in the case of Miss Ora Pinsent's numerous circle of acquaintances, as well as in her own, how the occupation and the temperament have their necessary effect on life and action. The author endeavours to exhibit all sides—he takes none.

A HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR. By W. BIRKBECK WOOD, M.A., late Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford, and Major J. E. EDMONDS, R.E., D.A.Q.M.G., with an Introduction by H. SPENSER WILKINSON, with Maps and Plans. Demy 8vo. 12*s*. 6*d*. net.

SIR JOSHUA REYNOLDS. By W. B. BOULTON. With 49 Illustrations. Demy 8vo. 7*s*. 6*d*. net.

The work aims at giving a complete record of the life and work of the great artist. The strictly chronological method has been adopted, and the painter has been followed through each year of his life in order to trace the development of his art, and to follow Reynolds through his social relations with many of the most notable figures of his day.

NEW NOVELS

SECOND EDITION IN THE PRESS.

THE PASSPORT. By RICHARD BAGOT, Author of 'Donna Diana. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

This new novel of Mr. Richard Bagot's is a love-story pure and simple. The action takes place partly in Rome, but chiefly in the Sabine Mountains. It treats of love at first sight and of the difficulties, the result of caste-prejudices and traditions, by which a nobly born Roman girl and her lover found themselves confronted.

THE PATIENT MAN. By PERCY WHITE. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

The conflicting temperaments of a mother and daughter, each the product of a luxurious and selfish environment, is the subject of the new novel to which Mr. Percy White has devoted the powers of sympathy, satire, and observation.

SECOND EDITION.

MY FRIEND THE CHAUFFEUR. By A. M. and C. N. WILLIAMSON, Authors of 'The Lightning Conductor.' With 16 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'My Friend the Chauffeur' is a romance of the automobile.

SECOND EDITION.

TWISTED EGLANTINE. By H. B. MARRIOTT-WATSON. With 8 Illustrations by FRANK CRAIG. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'A story alive with colour and well told.'—DAILY CHRONICLE.

'The plot of the story is full of adventure and incident, and for charm and vivacity it recalls the earlier novels of Sir Walter Besant.'—DAILY GRAPHIC.

SECOND EDITION.

'His prose is full of salient pictures and his human beings are alive.'—DAILY MAIL.

'A volume which no reader on the lookout for the best contemporary fiction can afford to miss.'—STANDARD.

THIRD EDITION IN THE PRESS.

VIVIEN. By W. B. MAXWELL, Author of 'The Ragged Messenger.' Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'"Vivien" is a remarkable performance. It contains an immense number of characters which all are most carefully studied and individualised. It is immensely long, but so fresh, vigorous, and interesting that we read to the end without any sense of fatigue or boredom. Here, for once, we have a book which is written by a writer who brims over with what he has to say, and who not only writes but feels and sees.'—WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

THE FERRYMAN. By HELEN MATHERS. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'Its observation and characterisation are acute, and it is rich in detail and vivid in impression.'—DAILY MAIL.

'We do not remember to have read anything of this author approaching this in strength.'—DAILY NEWS.

THIRD EDITION.

A JAY OF ITALY. By BERNARD CAPES. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'Not only the best that Mr. Capes has done, but one of the finest romances we have read for many days.'—SPECTATOR.

SECOND EDITION.

THE PARISH NURSE. By MARY E. MANN. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'This is a most unusual story. . . . Mr. Marsh shows a singular care and thoroughness, and no one can put a plot together more neatly than he. From start to finish "The Marquis of Putney" palpitates with excitement.'—MORNING LEADER.

SECOND EDITION.

THE LADY OF LYTE. By GRAHAM HOPE. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

SECOND EDITION.

A TRAGEDY IN COMMONPLACE. By M. URQUHART. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'A tragic story, steadily and artistically worked up from the beginning. We can but honour a writer who chooses so difficult a subject and treats it with so much skill, and at the same time with so much sympathy and tenderness.'—PALL MALL GAZETTE.

SECOND EDITION.

BEHIND THE THRONE. By WILLIAM LE QUEUX. Crown 8vo. 6*s*.

'Not only extremely interesting, but very powerful, and shows a minute knowledge of Italian politics. This is the best novel I have read of modern Italy.'—DOUGLAS SLADEN, in the QUEEN.

GREAT BOOKS FOR 1/= NET EACH

It has been often remarked that the best thoughts of the best writers are buried in unwieldy and expensive volumes which few have the means to buy. No one can read all the good books which have been published; but there is not a soul, being able to read at all, who has not the time, if they were reachable in price, to read many of the best books.

The chance to obtain the books is what hitherto has been missing. Of course, there have been cheap editions of some of the foremost authors. What is wanted, however, is a reprint which is produced with the same authority as the original work, and is sold at a price easily within the reach of the smallest pocket. Moreover, it ought to be not only a book to read but one to keep; that is to say, it must be so well printed and bound, besides having the sanction of the proper text, as to be worth keeping.

All these considerations have been carefully studied in the production of the

HARMSWORTH LIBRARY

This admirable Library contains a large number of the world's masterpieces in literature, and each volume, uniform with the rest, is printed on permanent paper, is handsomely bound in cloth, and, typographically, is equal to books published at many times the price which is asked for it.

THE PRICE IS THE MOST WONDERFUL PART OF THE BARGAIN

EVERY WORK IN THE HARMSWORTH LIBRARY IS SOLD FOR 1/- NET

It is now possible to form, or add to a library, at a trifling expense. Really, one may obtain a whole library at what is ordinarily the cost of a single volume. And every book in the library is by a thinker who is world-famous.

For instance, the following ten celebrated books are now ready, and the volumes to follow will be found to be equally as well known.

VANITY FAIR.

IVANHOE.

JANE EYRE.

PILGRIM'S PROGRESS.
Bunyan's 'Prose Epic of English Puritanism.'

WESTWARD HO!

LIFE OF NELSON.
Southey's perfect and delightful work, which will live when all his verse is forgotten.

TOM BROWN'S SCHOOLDAYS.

EAST LYNNE.
Mrs. Henry Wood has written numberless books, but none so popular as this fascinating story.

ESSAYS OF ELIA.
'The style of Lamb,' says a critic, 'is as indefinable as it is inimitable.'

VOYAGE OF H.M.S. 'BEAGLE.'
Darwin's entrancing scientific work, full also of incident and adventure.

LITANIES OF LIFE

By KATHLEEN WATSON.

Third Edition. Crown 8vo. cloth, extra gilt top, price 2*s*. 6*d*. net.

'"Litanies of Life," by Kathleen Watson, is a little book containing five short stories, but every one of them is worth reading, and the note of all sounds sweet and true. The reader will lay down the book, as I did, with a feeling of profound sympathy and gratitude to the writer, in whose pages they can hear the tremulous throb of an intense emotion, which, however, does not obscure the finer and stronger note of heroic resolve.'—W. T. STEAD.

THREE LITTLE GARDENERS

By AGNES J. TALBOT.

Twenty-six Illustrations by Miss GERTRUDE M. BRADLEY.

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt.

THE LADY NAVIGATORS. By EDWARD NOBLE, Author of 'The Edge of Circumstance.' [Ready early in September.

Mr. Noble's work has been compared by the critics with that of Rudyard Kipling and Joseph Conrad. His new book is another story of the sea, displaying a delightfully humorous element that should win the author many new admirers.

THE BENEFACTOR. By FORD MADOX HUEFFER. [Early in September.

An admirable piece of character drawing. The literary quality of the style is that of a true artist, and the story is interesting from the first page to the last. We confidently anticipate that this will prove one of the most widely read novels of the year.

LIEUTENANT GULLIVER JONES. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD. [Early in September.

The author of 'Phra, the Phœnician' gives us here the adventures of a resourceful American sailor in the planet Mars. Although Mr. Arnold's Martians have little in common with the weird creations of Mr. H. G. Wells, his book holds the reader from start to finish, and has the advantage of possessing a strong love interest.

COMPETITION.

IN one of the best of the American trade papers, the American Stationer—from which, by the way, we are glad to see that business in the stationery business is very flourishing in the United States—there is a communication from a business firm on the subject of trade competition. In view, they say, of the present-day conditions in trade, the question might well be asked what is the real meaning of the word 'competition' as applied to business? They think the real meaning of the term has been perverted. 'The old adage that "competition is the life of trade" certainly never referred to the meaning that is given to it to-day by some of those engaged in mercantile business, and it occurs to us that a little discussion of the matter will be of interest, because if we could go back to the real meaning of the word we fully believe that it would help in restoring the old time conditions when it was entirely possible to make a reasonable profit on all classes of merchandise.'

It gives one a little shock to find an American firm wanting to go back to 'old time conditions' in business, because the Americans have a worldwide reputation for just that smartness in business which was unknown in the old-time business era, when it was possible to make reasonable profits. Although there is nothing new in monopolies in trade, for our kings and queens for hundreds of years sold them to individuals and companies, the modern trust system under which capital creates monopolies is mainly of American origin, and unless that system can be broken up to talk about going back to old-time conditions is vain.

Referring to the meaning of competition, we are told that 'in sports and athletics the word "competition" is given its real meaning, because in a test of strength between two opposing bodies it is real competition, since each side is putting forth its best efforts to excel with brain and skill as a basis.' This was the old-time idea of competition in sport, but it is perfectly certain that sport is no more free from unfair methods than business. 'If it were possible to obtain the same meaning in business, then we would obtain that real competition which would bring about the "survival of the fittest."'

It will be seen from the following description that there is at any rate an attempt at reaction against reckless trading in America. 'At the present time competition in business to many simply refers to how low an article may be sold. John Jones offers something at $1; his competitor feels it necessary to advertise it the next day at 98 cents. Now we ask, Is that competition? By no means! Price cutting never is and never should be considered so. If the other fellow would advertise the same article at $1, laying stress on some additional merit that the article may possess or being able to express the argument in a better way, there would be some merit in selling the goods at $1, the same as the other fellow has advertised.

'In view of the fact that the expense of conducting business generally is greater to-day than ever before, it must, therefore, naturally follow that it is just as necessary as ever to obtain a reasonable margin of profit on every line of merchandise sold; and because someone foolishly offers goods below prices which permit of getting a profit is no reason why competition should require that such prices should be met.

'It does not require any experience to sell goods at low prices, but it does require a good deal of brain and skill to maintain prices and to sell goods solely on their merits.

'This is real competition, and when the mercantile world concludes to restore the real meaning of the word all classes of business will undoubtedly be largely benefited.

'There is also a reaction in this matter which seems not to be generally understood. The masses of the people in patronising the cheap concern seem not to recognise that they are slowly but surely doing so to their own detriment, because in the constant forcing down of prices, on certain lines especially, it follows that the price of labour is forced down with them. It would, therefore, represent a far greater benefit to uphold the man who is selling a standard line of goods at a fair price.'

Probably one of the chief reasons why 'cutting' is so common in all businesses is the ease with which anybody, without experience, can 'commence business' on credit; this generally means opening a shop in opposition to some other which is doing well, and trying to get its customers away by selling at prices which leave no margin for profit. Fortunately, such unfair competition as this cannot last very long; but while it lasts it is a source of loss to the original business and of anxiety to its owner. As regards a remedy, we fear the only hope is that the evil will gradually cure itself by the feeling of the community making such unfair competition impossible.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A BOOK of unusual interest, by the late Sir W. Laird Clowes, entitled 'Trafalgar Refought,' will be published by Messrs. Nelson & Sons in a few days. All the knowledge of this great naval expert has been concentrated on the effort to depict a magnificent sea fight, fought under steam and with the tremendous weapons and murderous possibilities of to-day. This splendid book, as a gift and prize book for lads, should command a very large sale during the coming season.

In spite of the 'dead season,' Mr. John Lane announces a third edition of 'Heretics,' by Mr. G. K. Chesterton, and a seventh thousand of 'The Morals of Marcus Ordeyne,' by Wm. J. Locke.

On September 4 Mr. Unwin published an important book on Siberia, by Mr. Samuel Turner, F.R.G.S. The volume is elaborately illustrated from photographs by the author.

Mr. Max Pemberton's new novel, 'The Hundred Days,' will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. on the 15th inst. It is a stirring historical romance embracing the dramatic period between the escape of Napoleon from Elba and the Battle of Waterloo, the Emperor being a central figure in the narrative. Mr. Pemberton has not only studied the history of the time, but visited the districts in which the scenes of the novel are laid to secure accuracy in his local colour.

The demand for 'A Lost Cause,' by Mr. Guy Thorne, author of that popular book, 'When it was Dark,' continues very brisk, and Mr. John Long has now in preparation a fifth edition.

We understand that Mr. Augustine Birrell will publish a new volume of Literary Essays very shortly, through Mr. Elliot Stock.

Mr. George Allen published Miss E. L. Haverfield's new book, entitled 'Because of Jock,' on September 1.

Messrs. Everett & Co. are about to issue a new book, entitled 'The Story of Black Bess,' by Nat Gould, at the price of sixpence. This is certainly a new departure in publishing, as hitherto only reprints of works by famous novelists have been published at sixpence. The first edition of 50,000 copies will be ready by the 28th inst.

Messrs. Nimmo, Hay & Mitchell, Edinburgh, are adding to their 'Edina' Series of Poets 'Scott,' in large type, edited, with notes, by Andrew Lang, and 'Keats,' edited by Scott and Sampson. 'Scott' is now ready, and 'Keats' will follow shortly.

Mr. Heinemann will publish 'The Snare of Strength,' a new story by Mr. Randolph Bedford, on the 14th inst. This is a novel of Australian life, and, while it throws a strong light on politics and society in the Colony, it incidentally gives a most realistic description of a copper-mining boom and its far-reaching effects in a new country.

Mrs. L. T. Meade has excelled in several departments of literature. As a novelist she has taken her position among the foremost. The latest story from her pen is to be published by the house of Partridge in the autumn, and is to be entitled 'Old Readymoney's Daughter.'

Mrs. Humphry Ward is shortly to pay a visit to America in order to study American life and customs, and to get in touch with the American atmosphere. There is a prospect that this material may be used in the preparation of Mrs. Ward's next novel, which the Harpers will publish in America.

The American collector for whom Mr. A. Jackson secured the quarto Shakespeares is Mr. Marsden J. Perry, of Providence, Rhode Island, who has one of the finest libraries in the States. The price paid was over £5,000]

Messrs. Dana, Estes & Co., of Boston, evidently expect to have a large demand for Mrs. Laura E. Richards's new story, 'Mrs. Tree's Will.' They describe it as the 'most brilliant and finished piece of work which has yet come from the pen of this gifted author,' of whose previous novels they have sold over half a million copies.

Mr. Richard Bagot's new novel 'The Passport,' which has only been published a few days and is already going very well, is a love story pure and simple. The action takes place partly in Rome, but chiefly in the Sabine Mountains.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton announce the immediate publication of a new volume by the Rev. George Matheson, D.D., LL D., entitled 'Representative Men of the New Testament.'

'Kitty and the Viscount' is the title of a new novel by Mary Ouseley, well known in the journalistic world. It is a stirring romance of modern times, in which the peerage, love, and politics figure prominently. The book will be published by Messrs. Gay & Bird during this month.

A book treating of the life of the bluejacket aboard our old wooden men-of-war will be published by Messrs. Methuen almost at once. It is by Mr. J. E. Masefield, who is well qualified for writing a book of this kind, as he was bred to the sea from his thirteenth year till the sixteenth, and afterwards spent a considerable time in sailing ships and coasting steamers. The book is illustrated by reproductions from old prints, and from original drawings.

The British Empire Review (the official organ of the British Empire League) for September contains the Annual Report of the Council of the League and the proceedings of its Eighth Annual General Meeting held recently at the Mansion House, giving verbatim the speeches delivered by the Lord Mayor, the Earl of Derby, Sir William Mulock (Postmaster-General of Canada), the Hon. Walter James (Agent General for Western Australia), Lieut.-General Sir Edwin Collen, and others.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. announce the publication of a new book, entitled 'Mary, Queen of Scots, her Environment and Tragedy,' in two volumes, by Mr. T. F. Henderson, the well-known authority on Scottish history and editor with W. E. Healey of the 'Centenary Burns.'

We understand that, commencing with the October number, the price of the Woman at Home will be reduced from sixpence to fourpence net. Many special features have been arranged for the October issue, including the beginning of a new serial story by Max Pemberton. The size and number of pages will remain as hitherto.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall announce a new edition of Mr. G. H. Perris's 'Russia in Revolution.' This is the only complete narrative of events down to the conclusion of peace with Japan. Among the additions to the new volume are the substance of many conversations with Father Gapon, a remarkable hitherto unpublished portrait of the latter, and a critical account of the decree establishing an Elective Assembly.

Messrs. Bell will publish immediately a volume by Sir George Otto Trevelyan, entitled 'Interludes in Verse and Prose.' It is a collection of the author's best work in lighter vein, and includes the well-known and witty university extravaganza 'Horace at Athens,' 'The Cambridge Dionysia,' 'The Modern Ecclesiazusæ, or Ladies in Parliament,' and those portions of the 'Letters of a Competition Wallah,' such as the account of the heroic defence of Arrah, which have an abiding value.

On the centenary of England's most memorable naval victory, Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson will publish a re-issue of Mr. Douglas Sladen's 'The Admiral,' being the love story of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton. The author has handled the story in excellent taste, and the picture of Nelson is most vivid.

Encouraged by the great success of the Rapid Review, they will publish on the same date 'A Rapid Review of the Life of Nelson.' The information is derived from all the best sources, and is intended to supply those without much leisure for reading with a full yet concise account of the life of the great admiral.

A magnificent 48-page Art Supplement, in beautiful coloured cover, with a full-length portrait of H.M. the King, and a fine three-colour reproduction of Sam Bough's famous picture in the Scottish National Gallery of the 1860 Review, will be published with the Scottish Review on September 14. The Supplement will be lavishly illustrated with pictures of Scottish volunteer regiments, portraits of commanding officers, pictures of camp life, &c.

COVENTRY PATMORE.

It is probably not very unsafe to predict what Patmore's place will be in literary history. He does not quite stand in the central stream of the age in which he lived. He will not be inevitably thought of as representative of the intellect of his time, like Tennyson, nor as a spreading human force, like Browning, nor as a universal stimulant and irritant, like Matthew Arnold. His contributions to the national mind will be far less general than theirs, mainly because of his curious limitations of sympathy. Those who do not feel broadly may have a deep, but they cannot expect to have a wide, influence. They cannot suffuse themselves into the civilisation of the race. The individuality of the three poets I have named was soluble, and as a matter of fact particles of their substance flow in the veins of every cultivated man. Patmore was narrow, and he was hard; there is that in his genius which refuses to dissolve.—From 'Coventry Patmore' by Edmund Gosse.

WEBSTER'S LITTLE GEM DICTIONARY.

The G. & C. Merriam Company, of Springfield, Massachusetts, U.S.A., announce a work which promises to be a real multum in parvo in the way of dictionaries. It is only six by three inches in size, and contains a dictionary of the English language, abridged from Webster's International Dictionary, a gazetteer of the world, giving the standard spelling, pronunciation, and latest census figures for each entry, foreign words and phrases, abbreviations, weights and measures, and coins. The coloured maps are of the United States, its Colonial Possessions, and Cuba; also Panama and the Canal Commission's Plan of Excavation; Eastern Asia, including China, Japan, Korea, and Manchuria.

CONSIDERATION FOR THE RETAIL BOOKSELLER.

The Toronto Bookseller and Stationer, in a recent editorial, criticising Canadian publishers for ignoring the existence of booksellers whenever they advertise to the consumer, closed its remarks with the following graceful and deserved compliment to one of our publishing houses: 'Among the publishers who are doing the fair thing to the booksellers let us name one firm, which, being out of Canada, need not raise any questionings here—it is the Frederick A. Stokes Co., of New York. On a pamphlet which they have just gotten out to send to consumers of books of outdoor life they place the words prominently, "When possible order directly from your bookseller." We understand that whenever possible this firm makes it a point to direct purchasers first to the bookseller.'

Aside from any other consideration, it were desirable that every publisher should emulate the example set by the Stokes Company. In far too many cases publishers, after inducing the bookseller to stock up with their books, invade the bookseller's field, and by every device known to their clever advertising agents fish for the retail bookseller's trade. It is a short-sighted policy, to say the least, and has in many cases reacted disastrously upon the offenders, either by wiping out a certain number of booksellers altogether, or by making those who remain in the field shy of stocking up with the books of the publishers who are too keen after retail trade.

In all endeavours on the part of the publisher to develop and increase the sale of his books, the retail bookseller should have the first consideration. To divide the field with the retail bookseller not only weakens and breaks down the natural medium of distribution, but demoralises the whole trade. Manufacturers in other lines have recognised this fact long ago, and refuse, under all circumstances, to have any commercial relations with the public, referring all inquiries and orders, even large orders accompanied with remittances, back to one of their agents, a dealer in the neighbourhood from whence the order comes. It is only by encouraging and strengthening the retail distributing machinery that the book trade as a whole can hope to attain to that efficiency of which, at present, it often falls short.—Publishers' Weekly.

RAILWAY BOOKSTALLS.

A New Régime.

Not only the London and North-Western Railway but the Great Western Railway have thrown open the contract for their bookstalls to competition. The contracts between these companies and Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son expire at the end of the year and are not being renewed. The London and North-Western Railway Company have publicly invited tenders for the exclusive sale of books and newspapers, &c., on the line. Now the Great Western Company have privately issued invitations to various firms of newsagents to bid for similar rights throughout their own system.

The two railway companies which are about to terminate their connection with Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son have been actuated solely by the desire to do better for their shareholders. The project was mooted that they themselves should run the bookstalls, as another kind of railway 'side-show,' in addition to hotels, steamships, refreshment catering, &c., but after serious reflection the idea was abandoned.

Believing that the value of the monopoly had greatly increased of late years, they first gave its present holders the option of renewing the agreements on considerably higher terms. The sums asked were larger than Messrs. Smith & Son were prepared to pay, for the firm controvert the alleged great increase of the value of their business—the volume of the latter has undoubtedly grown, but it has been accompanied by a corresponding increase of working expenses in the process of distribution.

Statements have been published to the effect that each company has already made its choice, and names even have been given. It should, however, be pointed out that the North-Western tender does not close until October. On the other hand, the Great Western Company will arrive at a decision within a few weeks' time. This latter company are desirous of letting it be known that they are taking every precaution to prevent the change from inflicting the slightest inconvenience upon travellers by the line.

Messrs. W. H. Smith & Son are taking energetic steps to safeguard their own interests. Shops are being opened in every town where they had previously owned a station bookstall, and these shops will be as close to the stations as possible.—Daily Mail.

WHEN BANCROFT ENTERED GÖTTINGEN.

I have been for some days a regularly matriculated student of the University of Göttingen. On September 22 I obtained my Matrikel. The process of procuring it is very simple. The doors of the University stand ever open, and all are invited to the rich banquet of learning. Nothing is necessary toward becoming a member of the institution, except to give your name, your country, the occupation of your father, and the studies to which you will devote yourself; on this being known, a paper is immediately handed you, by which you become entitled to all the privileges and rights of a citizen of the Georgia Augusta. At the same time you shake hands with the Prorector, by which form you are understood to promise that you will obey the laws of the University. There is particular mention made in the Matrikel of duelling, of directly resenting an injury, instead of appealing to the proper authorities, of the preservation of a good character, and pure morals, of the associations called Landsmannschafter, and of appearing always in decent clothing. The fees amount to about one Louis d'or. The present Prorector is Consistorial-Rath Pott. He appeared particularly pleased on my declaring myself an American, and pointing to the name last entered in his book, which happened to be the name of a Grecian, bade me notice from what distant parts of the globe there were representatives at Göttingen. He then very particularly requested me to visit him, adding that he should have then detained me to hold a conversation with me, but he was involved in business and duties of his office.—From 'Letters and Diaries of George Bancroft' in the September Scribner's.

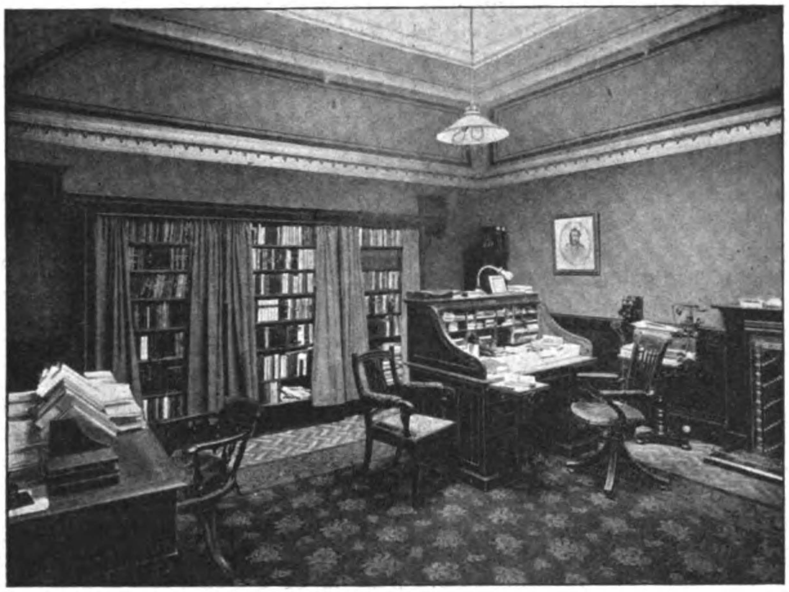
MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S NEW PREMISES.

The accompanying illustrations are of the new premises of Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier, in Edinburgh. The firm's reasons for moving from St. Mary Street to Princes Street were that the new premises would be both more commodious and more central; they were anxious, also, to have a sample room in which to show their own publications and those of the Fleming H. Revell Company, which they handle.



MESSRS. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S NEW PREMISES

Partners' Room.

Entering from Princes Street there are on the ground floor the sample room, and the principal stock room, with invoicing and dispatching departments, which extend to Rose Street Lane, by which all goods are received and dispatched.

Under this floor a basement, in which stock can be stored, runs from end to end, except that a room is detached in which stands the heating furnace.

On the first floor are the counting room, typewriters'-room, and partners' room, while on the second floor there are further partners' rooms and stock rooms.

We wish the firm all success and prosperity in their new home.

MESSRS. NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

We have been favoured by Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., with a parcel of their latest musical publications. Among much that is worthy of special mention, foremost reference must be made to the Welsh Rhapsody pianoforte duet by that master of melody, Edward German. This is in every way a capable work, into which the composer has put the fullest vim and zest. The theme is excellent, and the harmony throughout shows wonderful grip and finish. We may here remark that the Rhapsody for full orchestra was composed for the Cardiff Musical Festival last year, and this is, as we have said, a pianoforte duet arrangement by the composer. The price is five shillings. We are also most favourably impressed by the six compositions from the pen of Carl Bohm. These works are for the violin and piano, and we would particularly draw attention to the Gavotte, the Sarabande, and the Valse Etude. These three works are exceedingly tuneful, the waltz being particularly melodious and swingy. The Sarabande has an old-time touch about it which is unusually pleasing. Those who are adding to their collection of Old English organ music will appreciate the three short pieces by Samuel Wesley (No. 12) and the Voluntary in D (No. 13) by Dr. Wm. Croft, both admirably edited by John E. West. The former comprise Prelude, Air, and Gavotte, and are brought by their editor within the scope of the young student of the organ. Messrs. Novello & Co. have added another to their many valuable educational works by the publication of 'First Steps for the Violin,' in two parts, by Emil Kreuz. The first part is for violin only, the second comprises pieces for the violin with pianoforte accompaniment. Among the original compositions for the organ we may specially note No. 335, the Andantino in D flat, by H. Davan Wetton.

'SQUAW-TALK.'

'Why is it,' asks Mary K. Ford, a writer in the New York Bookman, 'that the American woman, lauded to the skies when written of, is addressed when written to as about on a par mentally with a child of twelve?' In the vocabulary of the American Indian, as this writer reminds us, 'squaw-talk' is the term for any kind of foolish, irrelevant, or untrue talk—the kind of talk that 'is good enough for women.' 'Squaw-talk,' according to Mary K. Ford, is a fitting description of the woman's page of the average newspaper, 'where recipes for face lotions, advice as to the proper way of conducting the feminine side of a courtship, and answers to foolish questions on etiquette combine with the silliest of stories to make up a page that for sheer inanity and stupidity is hard to beat.' But the same faults, she complains, though in a less degree, are to be found in a more ambitious class of literature. As an instance:

'Not long ago Miss Elizabeth McCracken wrote very interestingly in the Atlantic Monthly on the place held by the drama in the lives of the humbler citizens. These articles were widely copied and quoted, and Miss McCracken was commissioned to travel through the United States to gather material for a book on the women of America and the widely varying positions in life which they fill. It was naturally expected that she would have much to say that was interesting and suggestive; but the book was intended for women, and the author succumbed at once to the fancied necessity of writing "squaw-talk," with the result that her work is marred by the two great blemishes which so often disfigure literature addressed to women.

'The first of these is a sentimentalism which pervades much of the book, and is no less marked for being somewhat difficult to particularise. . . .

'A more serious fault mars her chapter on woman's suffrage in Colorado. The result of the important experiment is of great interest to all intelligent women, and had Miss McCracken been writing for the Atlantic Monthly it is upon the political phase of the question that she would have enlarged; but she was writing for women, and a different tone was necessary. Consciously or unconsciously, she has written down to us, with the result that the whole chapter is devoted to the everlasting question of whether or no suffrage is destroying the "womanly" qualities of the newly enfranchised.'

If the written word to women be so much in the nature of 'squaw-talk,' what shall be said of the oral? asks the writer. She answers her own query by recalling Mrs. Wharton's story, 'The Pelican,' in which is satirised the kind of 'talk' that is supposed to be popular with women to-day. We read:

'It will be remembered that in this story a young widow finds that the easiest way to earn her living is to give lectures. She begins with one upon Greek art, goes through a series of "Homes and Haunts of the Poets," and then, as years go on and her audiences become more sophisticated, has a course on modern theosophy, Schopenhauer, and the cosmogony. These lectures are of course attended only by women, and Mrs. Wharton characterises both the lecturer and her audience in a few terse words: "It was her art of transposing second-hand ideas into firsthand emotions that so endeared her to her feminine listeners."'

A Corner of the Principal Stock Saloon, showing Gallery.

Women occupy much the same position towards the drama as towards fiction, continues the writer; they are the great theatre-goers of this country, and 'no play displeasing to them has any chance of a lasting success.' Nevertheless, the much-abused theatrical manager 'is never guilty of the folly of producing a play designed especially for women and advertised as such.' She adds:

'Those who deny to us any appreciation of dramatic satire or humour need only count the women in the audience at one of Bernard Shaw's plays, plays in which sentiment is entirely subordinated to the wit and satire of the dialogue. That genuine humourist, Rosina Vokes, was a great favourite with women. Miss Beatrice Herford's clever monologues, levelled though they be at our foibles and failings; Miss May Irwin's fine humour; the broader burlesques of Messrs. Joseph Weber and Lew Field—all these appeal as strongly to women as to men.' Mr. Hamerton, in 'The Intellectual Life,' written thirty years ago, recognises and deplores the fact that men often condescend intellectually to women, and offers this excuse: 'We may not teach because it is pedantic, and we may not contradict because it is rude.' He adds that 'where women have most culture men are most open and sincere.' Women are now better educated, have a wider grasp of affairs, and have entered business life with marked success, concludes Mary K. Ford, but the attitude of men toward them is ever the same, 'and "squaw-talk," at least in literature, will probably be our portion for some time to come.'

HOW JAPANESE 'HANDMADE' PAPER IS MADE.

James Compton & Brothers, of London, contribute the following interesting account of how Japanese 'handmade' paper is made to Paper Making: 'Most persons are familiar with the peculiar character of Japanese paper, which is made from the inner bark of the mulberry tree. It is seldom bleached, but made as clean as possible; hence its peculiar colour. It is made in small villages, where all the inhabitants are paper-makers. The sons of paper-makers follow the profession of their fathers, unless adopted into a family pursuing some other vocation. The paper mulberry tree, of which it is made, is propagated by cuttings from the roots, which are planted on the borders of rice fields, and they mature in about five years. In November the reeds are cut and sold to the paper-makers, and the roots are left to send up new shoots. The shoots are cut in pieces two feet long, piled up, and allowed to ferment, which loosens the bark so that it can be stripped off, after which they are dried in the open air, or scraped at once. The scraping removes the brown epidermis, which is used for inferior wrapping paper. About thirty-three pounds of the bark is boiled for two hours in a strong lye of wood ashes. It is then put in bags and left in a running stream until the alkali is completely removed. It is next beaten, two pounds or three pounds at a time, on a wooden block, with heavy sticks for fifteen or twenty minutes. This pulp is mixed with a little rice paste, or a paste from a species of mallow. A thin pulp is obtained by stirring one-quarter of a pound of this mass into forty or fifty gallons of water.

'The web or mat on which the pulp is collected is made of slender strips of bamboo, only the thirty-sixth part of an inch in diameter; several hundred of these are bound together with silk thread; the rods all run lengthwise of the sheet, and hence the mats can be rolled or folded up in one direction. For coarse paper, reed mats are employed. The process of manufacture is essentially the same as in making hand-made paper. A woman sits in front of the tank and stirs it vigorously, then dips a mat and frame into the vat, takes up some of the pulp and shakes it, so as to felt the fibres together. A single dip makes a very thin tissue paper; most paper is made by dipping twice and draining each time. After the second dipping the mat is placed on end by the side of the tank to drain, the frame put on a second mat, which also receives its first dipping. While the second sheet is draining for the first time, the mat with the first sheet is laid face down on a pile of finished sheets, with a rice straw between them. While the second sheet is draining for a second time, the mat is taken off from the first sheet, so that only two mats are necessary. When 500 or 600 sheets, which form a day's work, are completed, they are pressed for a while with heavy weights, then taken up one at a time by means of the rice straw, and placed on smooth boards to dry in the sun.

When dry the sheets are stripped from the board by a sharp knife with the blade at right angles to the handle, like a sickle. The finished paper weighs about one half as much as the bark employed.

'Copying paper is collected by the middleman from the numerous small paper-makers in the villages of the paper districts, a few reams from each house, and sold to the wholesale dealers; hence the considerable variations in the quality, which it is impossible to avoid in paper produced by such a variety of hands.

'The uses to which the Japanese put paper are various in the extreme. Almost everything that is not subjected to any severe usage is manufactured from paper prepared by several chemical processes, many of which are exceedingly ingenious.'

CRYSTAL GAZING.

SIR,—Wherefore should a student of Walton's 'Donne,' like the writer of your article on 'Occult Literature,' pose—if you will forgive the word—as a Philistine? We are all interested, more or less, about subjects concerning which 'nothing definite is known.' Nothing definite is known about what Thought is; or about what gravitation is, or ether is—or isn't. Nothing definite is known about why salmon rise freely once in an azure moon. In the same way, nothing definite is known about why some people can see pictures in a glass ball, while others cannot. Nor is it known why a few see, correctly, the object which is in your mind, or mine; or distant events. The thing occurs, if I may believe my own experience, and we can only learn more about it by careful experiment. That the man in the street does not want to know proves nothing. Man has been called 'the measure of the Universe,' but the man in the street is not the person so described. If you admit, as you do, that it is almost certain that 'one individual can in some way influence the thoughts of another at a distance,' you admit a good deal more than I am ready to concede. If you are right, you may have hit on the cause of successful crystal gazing. I only say that crystal gazing is sometimes successful. You go rather further than I do; you go into unplumbed deeps of metaphysics.

Again, crystal gazing, you say, 'is only one station towards calling spirits from the vasty deep.' Why? I know scores of experimenters in crystal gazing. Not one of them ever dreams of calling spirits from anywhere.

There is no connection, and they know it, between the two things. If you can call spirits, why not? That also must be in nature. But I never saw any trace of evidence that spirits come 'when you do call them.'

'What good can come out of crystal gazing?' Merely a few additions to the science of psychology; to the knowledge of human faculty. We never know what commercial advantages may result from additions to knowledge, but with these commercial advantages science has no direct connection, unless one wants money. What good could come of Newton's rubbing a piece of glass with a piece of paper? Newton did not know, and did not care; but your electric lighting and rapid means of transmitting bad news comes of it. You call these things 'good,' but Newton was seeking knowledge in a disinterested spirit, the scientific spirit, the spirit of Darwin. What 'good' comes of your believing that you had apes for ancestors? I don't know; but Mr. Darwin is highly respected. He wrote a book on worms—but not as bait, yet what else are worms 'good' for? These seem obvious reflections, don't you think so?

Yours faithfully,

A. LANG.

BOOK CATALOGUES.

SIR,—In reprinting my letter to the Publishers' Weekly on the subject of cataloguing secondhand books, you express the 'fear that the difficulty and expense of properly classifying a large miscellaneous stock are much greater than Mr. Welsh supposes.'

Now a great many, if not most, of the secondhand booksellers attempt some kind of classification in their catalogues, and all I plead for is that they should agree to adopt some uniform and well-known system. The Dewey system is the one generally adopted in all but the largest libraries here—and it is, I think, the one readiest and easiest applied to a miscellaneous stock. Why not adopt it universally in secondhand book cataloguing?

I think your fear is ill-founded. I have had not a little experience in cataloguing, and I know that the classification, when once a system is decided upon and uniformly followed, will entail very little, if any, extra expenditure of time or trouble or money.

The librarian of small libraries consults the secondhand book catalogues, and he will do so more than ever. I would say to the secondhand bookseller, classify your wares as he has to classify his, indicate honestly their condition, and you will be amply repaid for the very small extra time. The private book-buyer of to-day is a busy man. He is getting used to library methods of classification; follow him up in this direction, and you will bring down your game more promptly.—Yours truly, CHARLES WELSH.

BOOKSELLERS' CLUB.

SIR,—I have not heard any news lately about the proposed 'Booksellers' Club,' so I do not know whether there is any likelihood of a start being made during the present year; but I should like to suggest that as a beginning a series of lectures on subjects interesting to members of the trade would be acceptable. I should think that it would be possible to induce Lord Avebury to give one, and to arrange for one each on printing, paper-making, and bookbinding; and I heard an excellent lecture on 'Self-Culture' by the Head Master of Mill Hill School during last autumn.

Further, I do not think that it is generally known that the following lantern slides for illustrating lectures can be hired from the Director of the British Museum:

Biblical Manuscripts	18
Oriental Biblical Manuscripts	11
Printed Bibles	17
Illuminated MSS.	71

I am, Sir,
Yours faithfully,
Hornsey, N. W. J. BRYCE.

A GORMANDISER—MR. BEGGARLY SPIFFER.

TIME was not lost, however, in affording the ignorant and uninitiated an opportunity of learning that the new addition to our number was no other, and no less, than the far-famed, hoggish, vulgar, Beggarly Spiff; and all that we had seen, and all that we had unitedly heard, of this most extraordinary gormandiser, we had our optics gratified to-night by witnessing. When I say 'gratified,' it truly was to us a gratification to see that the man positively deserved, and had no inclination to lose, his character so industriously earned as a glutton and economiser. And, although we 'talked at him' unsparingly, it would not, have answered his purpose to understand us; and he really did enjoy, apparently with a double relish, the many various excellent provisions of this most hospitable house.

As customary, our president proffered him the usual courtesies of the commercial room, by inviting him to become a guest at our table. This proposition, however, he declined, stating that he had 'com'd but a shoortish staage, and as he had taken an airly dinner (which we knew to be untrue) and warn't no but poorly, he thote he should tak a cup of tea.' 'Would a glass of wine be agreeable?' the president inquired; and 'he thote mayhap it ud do him no haarm,' he said, and 'he'd no objection to sup-we-us.' And sup he did, a first and second, yea, a third and fourth glass; and cheap, delicious drops they appeared to be to his too often cheated palate.

The waiter was then rung for, and questioned as to whether there was 'ote noiste i'th' larder'; and a long category of excellent plain dishes were a first and second time audibly announced by the said functionary. All, however, were insufficient; and, ordering tea, he inquired, 'had they no tung or fool, or sum-mut noiste and tastey like, as he only wanted to pick a bit, being none so weel; hoomsomnever, ete they had would do, if they'd put on th' side table; but they might boil a couple of eggs—or four—and be sure to do them three minutes, and to cut the toast thick, and put plenty of buther on it.'

The arrangement so far completed, his next request was that the waiter would fasten a napkin round his enormous frontispiece, by pinning it behind his neck; and, thus adorned, he forcibly realised all we had seen, or could imagine, of 'holy friars and clotted cream!' Never shall I forget the suppressed titter during the performance of this operation; for we did suppress our risible inclination, lest we should disconcert the man, and by so doing check his disposition to indulge to the usual extent. Nothing, however, prevented him from punishing the hostess; and he laid in his usual quantity, to be charged in the landlady's bill (as we somewhere read in Doomsday Book, during the feasting of certain public functionaries, 'so many dined,' when either money was more valuable, or our ancestors got more for their money than we usually get) one shilling and sixpence.

SATURDAY NIGHT IN THE COMMERCIAL ROOM.

January, 1840, Saturday.—Reached the Rose Inn, Gloucester, between six and seven o'clock in the evening of the shortest and most winterly day in my recollection. Having unwisely left Ross without trimming my lamps, and the atmosphere having become almost instantaneously pitchy dark, either I (for I could not see my hand before me) ran into what seemed to be a carrier's cart, or was run upon by the said conveyance. However, beyond the violence of the concussion, I sustained no serious inconvenience, and again drove quietly along, the wind blowing, and a hail-storm pelting most unpiteously. I was therefore not a little thankful on reaching my quarters after the most cold and comfortless drive I ever remember to have experienced. But I was fully compensated by meeting with a good fire and a cheerful reception from a few really sympathetic brethren, who, having passed through the same ordeal and suffered from the same cause, though now revived by time and heat and necessary stimulants, were sedulously anxious for my comfort and speedy resuscitation. We made a muster of nine or ten, and strange to say there were not more than two or three of the number whom I remembered to have met before, although they were evidently—at least the majority of them—men of equal standing with myself. I could account for this only from my being some ten days after my accustomed time. Indeed, I have often found that any deviation of this nature from the usual routine would bring me into contact with men who were strangers to me in person, although their names might have been familiar to me for years.

But, strangers as we were generally to each other, there was no estrangement of feeling among us. We were desirous of a friendly fellowship with one another; and, being all alike regularly beaten by the weather, we encouraged a determination to be as happy as circumstances would allow.

Relieved from toil—forgetting the buffetings of the storm and the rebuffs and anxieties of the day—finishing a week of cares—the merry laugh and energetic song went round; and the smart repartee, droll ingenuity of invention, quickness of fancy, and sentiment teeming with pathos, wit, and humour, exhilarated every heart, and converted us—at least for the time being, in defiance of the world and the pressure from within or without—into one social, happy, jovial circle.

Time, however, the prescriber of limits to all our mirth, brought in due course the approach to midnight, and with it the almost equally near arrival of Sunday's hallowed morning.

When finding joyous moments yet in store,
The glass to fill—its nectar drain once more—
A toast, though last the dearest far—our wives
And sweethearts! absent sweeteners of our lives—
Was warmly named—with heart-felt warmth was carried,
The single sighing—wishing they were married!
All hailed the sentiment with cordial zest;
Justice was done, and we retired to rest!

And when I consider how easily we promote sociality, and produce almost at first sight, by no sacrifice of self-respect but through a quiet determination to elicit the esteem of those amongst whom we may by chance be thrown, I feel happy in being a member in, or forming a part of, that community whose good feeling and benevolence for the brotherhood are so generously expansive. Would that the same unrestrained and open-hearted sentiments were more extensively diffused through all circles of society; and that, in lieu of the bitter animosity too frequently existing amongst men of the same trade or profession in the same town, the feelings of commercial men were predominant; and that their being competitors should impel them to be in honour more open-minded for the production of their mutual good. Why should they not dismiss all consciousness of jealousy, ever returning kindnesses, and giving and seeking information? This would unquestionably add to their profit, and could never detract from their comfort.

THE LATE MR. NORMAN DALZIEL WARNE.

'What's become of Toothorn?'

'Oh, he's putting in the whole of his time on his new book, "The Escapes of a Chauffeur."'

'Auto biography?'—Brooklyn Life.

MR. NORMAN DALZIEL WARNE.

WE have pleasure in giving our readers some further particulars of the late Mr. Warne, whose death we recorded in our last issue.

Mr. Norman Dalziel Warne was born in 1868 in London, was educated at the Charterhouse, Godalming, leaving there in the year 1885, joining at once his father and two elder brothers (William Fruing Warne and Harold E. Warne) at Bedford Street. In the year 1895 he, jointly with his two brothers, became a partner in the new firm on the retirement of Mr. Warne, senior (the founder of the business), and Mr. Edward James Dodd. He had therefore led an active business life in the publishing world for the past twenty years. He was very well known to a large circle of friends, more particularly in Lancashire and Yorkshire, where he had represented the firm continuously for many years. He was also well known in Paris and Brussels and in Ireland.

Apart from undertaking periodical business trips to the above-named places, he was always actively engaged in the production of numerous lines of children's books issued by the firm, and many of the most successful issues of recent years have been carried through under his guidance and initiative.

He died on August 25 last at 8 Bedford Square, at the early age of thirty-seven years.

THE CROMER EXPRESS DISASTER.

THE popularity of the coupon system of free accident insurance has been once more exemplified in the case of the Cromer express accident at Witham. Mr. Frank Clarke, an employé in the Accountant General's Department of the G.P.O., who was one of the victims of that disaster, was the holder of one of Letts's Original Diaries, published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., Ltd., and was consequently insured through the Ocean Accident and Guarantee Corporation, Ltd., for the sum of £1,000. This is the second claim for £1,000 which the Ocean Corporation have dealt with during the last few weeks in connection with Messrs. Cassell's publications, the other being that of a commercial traveller who lost his life in the recent Liverpool Electric Railway accident. So widespread is now this simple and convenient form of insurance that no accident of any magnitude can occur without claims arising similar to those we have mentioned.

GEORGE BANCROFT'S ACCOUNT OF A VISIT TO GOETHE.

JENA, Oct. 12, 1819. . . . I visited Goethe towards noon. He was talkative and affable, began at first with speaking of common affairs. Then the discourse came on German philosophy. Kant was mentioned with reverence. The state of America became then the subject of conversation. He seemed to think he was quite well acquainted with it. He spoke of several books on the country, of Warden's statistical account of America, &c. Then, too, Cogswell had given him an essay on American Literature, which appeared in Edinburgh. This essay Goethe praised much for the beauty of its style and for the liveliness and fancy with which it was written, and smiled as he mentioned the freedom with which he spoke of the different professions. Then the talk was of Cogswell, a 'lieber Mann'—a man of great excellence.

He spoke with pleasure of the visits Cogswell had paid him, &c. At length I, gathering courage from talking with him, took occasion to bring him upon the English poets. Byron he praised in the highest terms, declared himself one of a large party in Germany who admired him unboundedly, and seized on and swallowed everything that came from him. Of Scott we had time to talk; of Wordsworth — Southey he knew nothing; of Coleridge, the name—had forgotten, however, his works. The author of 'Bertram' was praised. 'The tragedy,' said Goethe, 'has many beautiful passages.' Byron, however, seemed to remain the most admired of all. After this, Goethe asked after my pursuits, praised me on my mentioning them, for coming to Germany, and spoke a word or two on Oriental matters. After this he asked what way I was to take the next day, and finding I was going to Weimar, offered me at once a letter which should make me welcome to the library. After a few more remarks I departed. In speaking of matters, I came into a strait almost as bad as poor Jennie with the Queen. Of Byron I said his last poem was reported to contain the most splendid exertions of poetical power, mixed with the lowest and most disgraceful indecencies. I did not think at the moment of Goethe's 'Faust.' I mentioned, too, Byron's wife, forgetting that Goethe had not been happy in the married state. . . . I spoke a word, too, of Eichhorn's writing so many books, forgetting that Goethe had found no end with writing many.—From 'Letters and Diaries of George Bancroft,' in the September Scribner's.

NELSON'S SIXPENNY CLASSICS.

We have before called attention to this very charming series in our columns. In external appearance, in typography and illustration, these volumes will please the most fastidious, and will form a library anyone may be proud of. This is not the case with the ordinary paper-covered sixpenny novel, which once read is regarded as valueless. These sixpenny classics are strongly bound in tasteful cloth covers, and their whole production is really one of extreme excellence. The first six volumes comprise 'A Tale of Two Cities,' 'Tom Brown's Schooldays,' 'The Deerslayer,' 'Henry Esmond,' 'Hypatia,' and 'The Mill on the Floss.' The next six volumes will be 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' 'Last of the Mohicans,' 'Adam Bede,' 'The Old Curiosity Shop,' 'Oliver Twist,' and 'Kenilworth'; to be followed at regular and frequent intervals by other favourite and standard works.

Notices of Books

From Mr. George Allen.—'Because of Jock,' by E. L. Haverfield. Miss Haverfield has given us in this story what so many women novelists fail at—a portrait of a manly, thoroughly comprehensible hero. This is Cecil Thornton, a captain in the army, who comes home on leave from India with the object of conveying to the stricken parents of a deceased comrade the mournful particulars relating to their son's last illness. Arrived at the country home of the Pearces, his frank honest nature at once takes captive the hearts of the old people, he is pressed to stay with them as long as he possibly can, and it ultimately ends in his falling in love with their only daughter, a bright fascinating girl whose tender sympathetic charm and sweet unfathomable eyes quite upset the gallant captain's equilibrium. But in reality Fan Pearce is an atrocious little humbug, incapable of any true passion, and once the lovers are engaged the shallowness of her self-centred nature is speedily apparent. Eventually she develops an attack of 'nerves,' and becomes hopelessly hysterical, imagining herself a frail invalid whose wishes should mercilessly govern all about her. Nevertheless the captain holds bravely by his compact, being prepared, if necessary, to sacrifice himself, and it is only when she shows herself at a critical moment utterly unfeeling and callous that he realises the unworthy character of the woman to whom he has pinned his faith. It is at this point that through an act of kindness towards a despairing backslider, one Jock M'Leod, Thornton makes the acquaintance of Elspeth M'Leod, his real destiny in life. How the re-assortment of the cards is brought about we have not space to relate. Enough that the story, which is remarkable for several delightful studies of character and that close acquaintance with country life and its surroundings which Miss Haverfield's previous novels have so pleasurably led us to expect, ends happily. We have every confidence in recommending it to our readers.

THE DEERSLAYER.'
(From Nelson's Sixpenny Classics.)

From Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.—'French Lesson Notes to accompany "La Première Année de Français Premières Lectures"' and Black's 'Reform French Readers,' by F. B. Kirkman, B.A. Of the 'Première Année, Prèmieres Lectures' we have already expressed a highly favourable opinion in these columns, and we need only say that the present volume seems to supply an admirable accessory to this course of French study, and to be in every way worthy of consideration.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'The Pocket Richard Jefferies: being Passages chosen from the Nature Writings of Jefferies,' by Alfred H. Hyatt. This little book—which certainly in its size fulfils the requirements of a pocket volume much more than many of its rivals—contains some of the most exquisite thoughts of Richard Jefferies and justifies in a marked degree to the delicate sympathy existing between that close observer of Nature's varied aspects and the general environment of country life. It is a treasure house of beautiful thoughts and reflections, which to be thoroughly appreciated should be explored amid rural surroundings. Lovers of Jefferies will assuredly thank Mr. Hyatt for this selection from their favourite author.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd. — 'British Progress in Pumps and Pumping Engines,' by Philip R. Björling. This, as may be supposed, is a volume of a purely technical character. It belongs to the series of 'National Engineering and Trade Lectures,' edited with the co-operation of the Board of Trade, Colonial and Foreign Offices, Colonial Governments, and leading technical and trade institutions, by Mr. Ben. H. Morgan. The design and construction of pumping and hydraulic machinery occupy a much more important place in the nation's industrial life than most people imagine. There are, in fact, few forms of mechanical engineering in which water pressure is not a prominent force. In the present volume the author supplies a detailed account, likely to be exceedingly useful, of the various kinds of pumps, those worked by hand, those driven by water-power, those in which wind is the propelling force, gas and oil engine pumps, hot-air pumps, and so forth, and in each case he is materially aided by numerous illustrations.

From the same. — 'British Progress in Gas Works Plant and Machinery,' by C. E. Brackenbury, A.M.Inst.C.E. A work of a similar character to the preceding. It contains a variety of useful information in regard to coal receiving, coal storing, retort houses and benches, retort stoking machinery, coke plants, condensers, exhausters, purifiers, gas holders, and other branches of the subject, and its explanations are throughout rendered still more serviceable by the clearness of the illustrations. The book also includes a bibliography of gas literature, and a classified list of British Manufacturers of Gas Works Plant and Machinery.

From Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd.—'The Romance of Lohengrin,' founded on Wagner's opera, by Bernard Capes. This is the third volume of a series of romances founded on Wagner's grand operas. 'The Valkyries' and 'Siegfried' we have already welcomed, and this too is good; the writing is fine, almost too much so, and we rather think that for their purpose we prefer the plainer style of the previous volumes. The descriptive passages are exceedingly good, and for them alone the book is worth reading. At the same time those who are not acquainted with the legend may make themselves familiar with it.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Arraignment of Paris,' by George Peele, edited, with a Preface, Notes, and Glossary, by Oliphant Smeaton. Numerous readers, we are sure, will welcome the addition of this play to 'The Temple Dramatists' series. In his Introduction Mr. Smeaton supplies much interesting information relative to the date of production of the play, the life of the author, the date of its composition, and so forth, and it need hardly be said that the text is carefully printed and adequately supplied with notes.

From Messrs. Hirschfeld Brothers, Limited. 'Appendix to Hossfeld's Japanese Grammar: comprising a Graduated Series of Exercises on the whole work, Extracts from leading Authors, Exercises in the Native Characters, and two Vocabularies,' by H. J. Weintz. This volume consists of four parts. In the first, which is the longest of the series, are a number of colloquial exercises on subjects such as naturally present themselves in daily social intercourse and are illustrative of the grammatical difficulties of the language; the second consists of similar exercises, but of a more advanced nature; the third comprises a series of Reading Lessons, compiled from the works of popular authors; and in the fourth the two groups of native characters are attentively considered. Possibly this last section is the most important of the four, but the entire work bears ample evidence of the care and labour bestowed upon it by the author. It is a manual that should be of the greatest service to the student.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'A House of Letters,' edited by Ernest Betham. This volume consists of excerpts from the correspondence of various well-known people addressed to Matilda Betham, poetess and painter of miniatures. Among her correspondents are included Coleridge, Lamb, and Southey, and it is to these, no doubt, the reader will first turn. The Jerningham letters are, however, well worth dipping into, for they are quaint in their style and not infrequently amusing and interesting. The volume is illustrated by a number of photogravures and half-tones, and contains a miniature in colours of Queen Victoria from a painting by Sir William Ross. Altogether an interesting and entertaining volume of reminiscences.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—'Lady Jim of Curzon Street,' by Fergus Hume. Mr. Hume takes up a rather unaccustomed rôle in this novel, and appears as a chronicler of smart society doings. The leading characters of the story are mostly members or connections of the aristocracy, and the scene of their actions is laid at various fashionable resorts at home and abroad. But this in no way detracts from the author's capability for sensational writing, and the efforts of the beautiful Lady Jim, daughter-in-law of the Duke of Pentland, to retrieve the fallen fortunes of herself and her spendthrift, disreputable husband are fraught with the utmost excitement. Prompted by an idea suggested by Wilkie Collins's 'Woman in White,' and having found a suitable 'double,' her greatest coup is to fabricate the death of her husband, the happy-go-lucky Lord Jim Kaimes, in order that they may reap the insurance money on his life, some twenty thousand pounds. The scheme succeeds, but in the moment of its accomplishment other events occur which completely alter the face of affairs, and eventually Lady Jim, hemmed in by the accomplices whom she has so adroitly deceived, comes by a very tragic end. Beyond the sensational element, which is well sustained to the close, the story is remarkable for a large infusion of clever conversational talk, some of which strikes us as familiar. The character of Lady Jim, we are inclined to think, is one of the best Mr. Fergus Hume has yet drawn.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Harvest of Love,' by C. Ranger Gull. This is the story of a man who believes he has planned out his life, and thinks that love has no particular place in it. Of course he falls a victim to the blind god, and falls in love with a girl who is socially his inferior, being the daughter of a retired auctioneer. Having resolved to conquer his love, he lets the girl see plainly that he intends to leave her, and she dies broken-hearted. On her deathbed Trebair discovers that love is superior to everything, and the girl dies in his arms happy. Thereafter he resolves to emigrate, having learnt that love itself, not love's result, is everything. The book is better written than the average novel, and there is much amusing if rather bitter description of provincial society. Trebair, the principal character, is a prig of the worst description; but his friend Lord Wellwyn, who marries a jolly little woman, an actress, is a real good sort; there is also a Bohemian literary man of somewhat disreputable habits and clothes, who is interesting even if somewhat unreal. It is a book worth reading, but will appeal probably to men rather than the other sex.

From Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co.—'The Poor and the Land: being a Report on the Salvation Army Colonies in the United States and at Hadleigh, England, with Scheme of National Land Settlement and an Introduction,' by H. Rider Haggard. For many readers of a philanthropic disposition, it is no injustice to Mr. Haggard to say, this report will have greater attraction than his novels, absorbing though these have been. It was in February of the present year that Mr. Haggard, on the initiative of the Rhodes Trustees, was nominared a Commissioner by the Secretary of State for the Colonies and dispatched to the United States for the purpose of inspecting three land settlements which have been established in that country by the Salvation Army, the further object being to ascertain whether some analogous system might with advantage be applied in transferring urban populations of the United Kingdom to different parts of the British Empire. Mr. Haggard's report may on the whole be taken as favourable to the success of the undertaking. He has also propounded a special scheme of his own, which has received strong promise of support from Canada, through which certain weaknesses or defects in the Salvation Army procedure may be remedied, more particularly in regard to the financial and managerial sides of the question. It is needless to say his views on a question of so important and intricate a character have received wide attention and have elicited a large amount of criticism, both favourable and adverse. The reader will find all the pros and cons of the matter set down in this paper-bound volume, will learn much that is interesting, and to some extent perhaps a little startling, concerning the Salvation Army colonies in California, Colorado, and Ohio, and will generally be led to consider one of the most difficult social problems of the present day. Several illustrations of the different settlements are given.

From Messrs. Luzac & Co.—'Hebrew Humour and other Essays,' by J. Chotzner, Ph.D. The majority of the essays in this volume were read as papers before various literary societies, while others have already appeared in periodicals from which, through the courtesy of the editors, they are now reproduced. They deal with the humour and satire not infrequently found in the works of both ancient and modern Hebrew writers, a subject which has hitherto attracted but little attention, and is likely, in the opinion of Dr. Chotzner, to arouse the interest of the general reader. The volume bears evidence of no slight acquaintance with biblical and other Hebrew literature, and also testifies in a marked degree to the studious attributes of the writer.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Raw Material: Some Characters and Episodes among Working Lads,' by Phyllis Bottome. Those who have sufficient breadth of mind to appreciate varieties of unformed character far removed from their own more refined surroundings, and are keenly responsive to the humours of a situation if occasionally a little irreligious and ghastly, will heartily enjoy this volume of sketches, limned by the lady manager of a working lads' club. All are intensely true to real life as seen by one of quick observation. The first contains a description of a sympathetic, courageous little district nurse, who by her energy and unfailing good nature wins the hearts of her poor patients; the second concerns the doings of 'The Chitter,' a barge boy whose like is frequently to be found by the river side; the third relates the experience of an 'incorrigible' bold rascal who was eventually tamed; the fourth describes the bravery of a young hero passing by the name of 'Nuffin,' and so on. To the intrinsic humour of the different episodes Miss Bottome has imparted no little humour of treatment, and her side-speeches, so to speak, are extremely diverting.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The House by the River,' by Florence Warden. One has come by this time to calculate with confidence on the fare Miss Warden will place before her readers. The opening will be quiet and unemotional enough, giving little warning of the horrors to follow; but once the barriers of restraint have been trampled down, then helter skelter we go at a furious pace, regardless of improbabilities, contradictions, and social absurdities, until we arrive, excited and breathless, at the end of the story. We then recover our senses and calmly inquire what all the pother is about. In the present instance a typewriting girl, who has previously fallen romantically in love with a handsome young man, a complete stranger, whom she has met on a railway station platform, goes to the country residence of his father as secretary. From the first moment of her appearance at 'the house by the river' she is surrounded by mysteries. What looks uncommonly like a murder leads the way, and this is followed by other sensational events. Eventually the master of the house—but no, we will not give the secret away. It will be sufficient to say that readers of an excitable, imaginative disposition will have an uncommonly lively time of it in Miss Warden's society. The book is full of thrills.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
3. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.
5. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

POPULAR NEW FICTION

THE NEW MINISTER. 6s.

By ORME AGNUS.

Aberdeen Journal.—'"The New Minister" will rank with the author's best work. The characters are admirably drawn, and are always intensely human. Humour and pathos are skilfully blended. The book is a most fascinating production.'

Daily Express.—'"The New Minister" has pathos and it has observation. It is really human, and it is an admirable specimen of the "Adam Bede" school of fiction.'

By the Author of 'Out of the Hurly Burly,' 'Captain Bluitt,' &c.

THE QUAKERESS. 6s.

By MAX ADELER.

Morning Advertiser.—'It is refreshing to read such a novel as "The Quakeress." A pretty story in a pretty setting. Thoroughly healthy in tone, pathetic, but not gloomy. Its character sketches are delightful, and the sayings of some of the men and women with whom the author has peopled his novel deserve to live.'

By the Author of 'The Garden of Lies,' 'Journey's End,' &c.

TOMMY CARTERET. 6s.

By JUSTUS MILES FORMAN.

Court Journal.—'That Mr. Forman should write a book which is pleasant to read and picturesque in description was to be expected from the author of "Monsigny" and "The Garden of Lies," but he has done more, much more than that, in "Tommy Carteret." The dénouement is reached through an astonishingly powerful situation. The story has a power of haunting, such as is rarely attained in the works of modern writers.'

By the Author of 'Mr. Barnes of New York,' 'Mr. Potter of Texas,' &c.

PHIL CONWAY. 6s.

By A. C. GUNTER.

Daily Mail.—'The ingenuity of Mr. Gunter never fails. His invention is as daring, as reckless, and as fascinating as when he wrote "Mr. Barnes of New York."'

By the Author of 'Dupes,' 'Partners,' &c.

WHITEWASH. 6s.

By ETHEL WATTS MUMFORD.

Pall Mall Gazette.—'Brightly written and brisk in movement.'

Book and News Trades' Gazette.—'The book teems with exciting situations, too numerous to mention, and is just the book for holiday reading.'

By the Author of 'Scoundrels & Co.,' 'Captain Shannon,' &c.

THE JACKAL. 6s.

By COULSON KERNAHAN.

Athenæum.—'Related with spirit and gusto. The mystery provided for us is ingenious and unusual.'

World.—'A feat in novel writing. Leaves most novels of the kind miles behind.'

FAUCONBERG. 6s.

By Sir WM. MAGNAY, Bart.

Sir Wm. Magnay's reputation as a novelist already stands very high, but it is likely to be immensely increased by 'Fauconberg.' It is one of those enthralling stories of adventure and intrigue in which love and politics are at cross purposes, and is written with such power and such distinction that it should be reckoned as one of the most striking novels of the season.

THE FORTUNA FILLY. 6s.

By HOWEL SCRATTON.

Morning Leader.—'"The Fortuna Filly" is a rare thing—a sporting novel that will interest non-sporting readers. It is cheerfully written, and contains much information as well as amusement.'

By the Author of 'The Shadow of the Czar,' 'The Viking's Skull,' &c.

THE WEIRD PICTURE. 6s.

By JOHN R. CARLING.

Morning Leader.—'A powerful but gruesome tale, told with considerable force and spirit.'

THE CARDINAL MOTH. 6s.

By FRED M. WHITE.

One of the most thrilling narratives that has yet seen the light of day. A most remarkable piece of imaginative work.

By the Author of 'The Final War,' 'Rainbow Island,' &c.

THE PILLAR OF LIGHT. 6s.

A Booklet that will create a sensation.

A WORLD WITHOUT A CHILD

By COULSON KERNAHAN.

THIS new booklet by the Author of 'The Child, the Wise Man, and the Devil,' 'God and the Ant,' and 'The Face beyond the Door,' whose works have sold to the extent of, roughly, half-a-million copies, tells of a godless and dying world where Spring brings with it no new bird, no new beast, NO NEW CHILD. It tells too how God, wrestling with God, in prayer, answers the agonising cry of the world without a child, until it hears once again the sweet clamour of little voices calling, 'FATHER! DEAR FATHER!'

'A WORLD WITHOUT A CHILD' is wanted—it is urgently needed. It speaks of a condition that is already speaking so loudly that pulpit, press, and people are asking alike 'To what end must it lead?'

'A WORLD WITHOUT A CHILD' WILL SELL IN THOUSANDS. HAVE YOU ORDERED A SUFFICIENT NUMBER?—REMEMBER THE PUBLICATION DATE, MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, AND THE PRICE, 1s. IN PAPER, 2s. IN CLOTH.

A CONSENSUS OF CRITICAL OPINION.

Mr. A. C. SWINBURNE.—'Many thanks for your most beautiful little books. Mr. Watts-Dunton desires me to say how thoroughly he agrees with my estimation of their unrivalled beauty.'

Professor WALTER RALEIGH.—'It was a happy thought to reproduce the old portraits of actors; they make a much better illustration than fancy portraits could do. The type is very clear and easy to read, and the volumes will be of real service to me in saving the heavy labour of taking the Cambridge Shakespeare to and fro, to lecture-rooms and such places.'

Mr. EDMUND GOSSE.—'Although Shakespeare has been reprinted in a thousand forms, it seems to me that these little volumes present the plays in the most graceful and delicate way that has hitherto been achieved.'

Mr. AUSTIN DOBSON.—'These are eminently desirable little books, light to handle, pleasant to look at, irreproachably prefaced.

Good paper, binding,—plain to read—
"What needs my Shakespeare" now indeed ?

I hope they may have every success.'

Mr. WILLIAM ARCHER.—'The edition is indeed a triumph, extraordinarily attractive and readable. It certainly deserves the widest popularity. It is a service at once to the poet and to the public to bring out such an edition at such a price.'

TWO NEW NEWSPAPER BOOK SCHEMES.

IN the interests of the booksellers it would have been a very good thing if the newspapers had one and all refused to interfere in the bookselling business, and we believe that in the interests of the newspapers themselves, in the long run, it would have been much better not to have attempted to make money by outside ventures. It was a little amusing the other day to find the Times giving the London and North-Western Railway solemn warning that if there was any truth in the rumour that it was going to run its own bookstalls it had better give up the idea and mind its own business, and all the time it was hatching a great book-lending and book-selling scheme, which might fairly be described as not the kind of business any newspaper should attempt to do.

The following account of the Times scheme is from the Daily Mail of September 12:

'The Times Book Club came into existence yesterday, and the new book rooms at 93 New Bond Street were crowded with borrowers of books from ten o'clock in the morning onwards.

'Yearly subscribers to the Times are all members of the club, can borrow three books a day, can change them daily or keep them as long as they like, and have the privilege of purchasing any book they have read at an average discount of 50 per cent. off the published price.

'The book rooms in New Bond Street constitute a first-class and luxurious library, where Times readers may look round the shelves and select their books, and where a trained staff of forty are in readiness not only to wait on subscribers, but also to give them any information or advice on books they desire to read.

'The whole building of six floors has been secured by the promoters of the scheme, and the ground floor and first floor are used as reception rooms for readers. Oak bookcases line delicately tinted walls, and tasteful frescoes of green harmonise with soft deep green carpets. Tables laden with irregular piles of books stand here, there, and everywhere, and in convenient places are comfortable chairs for those who wish to examine books at leisure. The place was in a hum of activity all day yesterday, and groups of people stood on the pavement watching borrowers coming and going.

'Every kind of book was to be found inside, from the boy's tale of adventure to the French novel and solid works of travel or biography. A great pile of green-covered books proved to be the new novel, "A Servant of the Public," by Anthony Hope.

'"The pile is melting like a glacier," said the manager. "We started with over a thousand copies of 'A Servant of the Public,' and we shall probably want a fresh supply.

'"Yes, the new project promises to be very successful. We have been crowded like this all day. At this rate we shall be issuing about three thousand volumes a day."

'One great point about this place is that people can browse among the books, and take any they want. If there is any book they want which by some oversight is not in stock the fact has only to be mentioned and it will be immediately procured. "Apart from standard works, we have here every individual book which has been published in the last six months."'

If the Times scheme began and ended in the way described by the Daily Mail it would be bad enough from the point of view of the bookseller and the circulating library, inasmuch as it must to the extent it supplies books take that supply out of the hands of the trade; but a feature of the Times scheme not mentioned in the Daily Mail notice is that, while all non-net books will be sold at 25 per cent. off, books which have been in circulation only a month or two will be sold at greatly reduced prices, even net books at less than half-price in 'about six months' time.'

It seems to us that this may seriously affect the working of the net book system, because it will be very difficult indeed to say from the appearance of a book how long it has been in circulation. We think the Daily Mail is not quite correct in saying subscribers can borrow books and keep them 'as long as they like,' as, if this were the case, a new net book could be borrowed on publication, kept six months, and then bought at half-price.

'FIRST TEN VOLUMES OF "THE HARMSWORTH LIBRARY."

'The man or woman who wishes to form a library of the world's best books, or to add to his or her present collection, has now an opportunity which may never occur again. The publication of "The Harmsworth Library"—the first ten volumes of which will be on sale September 13—places the world's greatest books within the reach of the humblest means.

'At the low price of one shilling each will be published a series of volumes which have never before been produced on such a scale of excellence at anything like the price. Printed in large, clear type upon specially prepared paper of high quality and handsomely bound in art linen, these volumes are emphatically books to keep, and are as ornamental in appearance as they are interesting and valuable in their contents. They can only be sold at a shilling in view of the enormous demand that is anticipated for them.

'The first ten volumes of "The Harmsworth Library" consist of the following famous works: Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," Southey's "Life of Nelson," "Tom Brown's Schooldays," Charlotte Brontë's "Jane Eyre," Kingsley's "Westward Ho!" Charles Lamb's complete "Essays of Elia," Sir Walter Scott's "Ivanhoe," Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," Darwin's "Voyage of H.M.S. Beagle," and Mrs. Henry Wood's "East Lynne."

'"The Harmsworth Library" will be on sale at all booksellers' and newsagents'; but, owing to the huge demand already expressed for it, intending purchasers should place their orders at once.'

If newspaper proprietors become publishers and sellers of books, at least they should adopt the ordinary course and supply through the trade, and we are glad to see from their announcement that Messrs. Harmsworth's Library will be on sale at all booksellers'. What we cannot understand is how there can be anybody left in England who wants another edition of any of the works mentioned above; they certainly are attractively produced.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Among the important books which Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. will publish this autumn is 'Mrs. Fitzherbert and George IV.,' by W. H. Wilkins, M.A., F.S.A. Marie Fitzherbert, born in 1736, was a Roman Catholic lady of good birth who privately married George, Prince of Wales (afterwards George IV.) in 1785. She separated from him in 1795, when he married Caroline of Brunswick. She returned to him in 1800 by permission of her Church. She finally separated from him in 1811, and died in 1837, a few months before the accession of Queen Victoria. Her marriage was twice denied in the House of Commons, and never publicly acknowledged during her life. This book, which is written with the approval and assistance of the descendants of Mrs. Fitzherbert's family and friends, gives the text of the documents which Mrs. Fitzherbert reserved in 1833 for the purpose of proving her marriage. These materials will now be published for the first time by special permission, and place the fact beyond doubt. The book will also contain a large number of other unpublished papers and letters of great interest. It will be in two volumes, with many illustrations.

Mr. Heinemann will publish a translation of Myriam Harry's great novel 'The Conquest of Jerusalem,' on the 22nd inst. Mysticism, poetry, and the fascination of the City are combined in this story with a remarkable study of a savant who is divided between his love for his saintly but bigoted wife and the magnificent paganism of an ancient Moabitish religion, of which a beautiful Moabitess is the embodiment.

Mr. Elkin Mathews will publish immediately a new edition of Dr. Henry Van Dyke's popular work on the late Poet Laureate, 'The Poetry of Tennyson.'

The Standard Books for Boys, a fully illustrated series of half-crown rewards published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Ltd, enjoy a well-deserved popularity. The above firm is about to issue a two-page list of titles in this series together with the popular two-shilling series for girls. Booksellers who can use these lists in quantities can have them bearing their own imprint upon application to the Publishers, 15a Paternoster Row, London, E.C.

Mr. John Long has acquired the copyright of Mr. Barry Pain's new story, entitled 'The Lone Hand,' which he hopes to publish at an early date.

Mr. Fitzgerald Molloy has completed a new book which will be issued by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. during the autumn under the title of 'The Russian Court of the Eighteenth Century.' The author has devoted considerable space in the volume to the reign of the Empress Elizabeth and Catherine II. In addition to the evidence of English Ambassadors where despatches and papers have been preserved in the State Paper Office and the Manuscript Library of the British Museum, the author also quotes the correspondence of Foreign Ministers and the memories of travellers to the Court of St. Petersburg. The book will be fully illustrated with portraits.

Miss Myra Hamilton is already favourably known as the author of some graceful fantasies, and Mr. Heinemann now announces another volume to be published about the end of this month. 'Kingdoms Curious,' as Miss Hamilton styles her tales, is illustrated by Mr. Arthur Rackham, Mr. A. R. Millar, and Miss Marie Miles.

The Book Monthly for September has a most interesting article on 'The German Book Trade' by Bruno Conrad.

Mr. John Lane published on September 14 'The Duke of Reichstadt (Napoleon II.),' a Biography, compiled from new sources of information, by Professor Edward Wertheimer. Until now there has been no authentic account in English of the ill-starred son of Napoleon I. A great deal of material has been collected, and additional interest is provided by the numerous portraits that Professor Wertheimer has been permitted to reproduce. On the same day appeared two other volumes: Vol. XXX. of the New Pocket Library, made up of a reprint in one volume of Beaconsfield's three stories, 'The Young Duke,' 'The Rise of Iskander,' and 'The Infernal Marriage,' an Introduction being contributed by the Earl of Iddesleigh; and 'The Little Farm,' by 'Home Counties,' Vol. XII. of the 'Country Handbooks.'

Mr. Cecil Aldin, whose 'Dog Day' has been a continued success from the time of its publication three years ago, has illustrated the adventures of 'A Gay Dog,' which Mr. Heinemann will publish on the 20th inst. The dog in this case is a bull-pup, and his doings are of a most diverting kind. We see him, for instance, on show, in a lyric artiste's dressing-room, at Henley and Ascot, and at a continental watering-place, and finally we see the dog reformed.

Lord Dunsany has ready for the press, and Mr. Elkin Mathews will publish early in the autumn, an imaginative prose work entitled 'The Gods of Pegana.' According to the Preface, 'There be islands in the Central Sea whose waters are bounded by no shore and where no ships come—this is the faith of their people.' This new 'Erewhon' has been sympathetically illustrated by a series of beautiful drawings by Mr. Sidney H. Sime, and reproduced in photogravure by Messrs. T. & R. Annan & Sons, of Glasgow.

'Minerva's Manœuvres' is the taking title of a story announced by Messrs. A. S. Barnes & Co.

If the announcement of the Bobbs-Merrill Company is to be trusted, all of us who are interested in American life and literature should read 'The Man of the Hour.' The Bobbs-Merrill Company inform the world that this new story by Octave Thanet 'is an American story, close to American life, strong with the vigour of American ideals, and vibrant with the tenderness of American love.' It more nearly approaches 'the great American novel than any other book of our day.' Are we to conclude from this that in the opinion of the Bobbs-Merrill Company the great American novel is a thing of the past?

We regret to have to record the death on August 21 of Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, author of 'Hans Brinker, or the Silver Skates,' and many other popular juvenile books, and editor of the St. Nicholas Magazine since its foundation in 1873.

An entirely new Natural History for Children is about to make its appearance under the title of 'Cassell's Natural History for Young People.' It is written by Mr. A. E. Bonser, and will be illustrated by over a hundred full-page plates prepared by Mr. George Rankin and Mr. Fairfax Muckley. The type will be large and readable, the scientific facts put in the simplest form, and a large number of true stories of the habits and intelligence of the animals will be given.

Mr. Herbert M. Thompson has a book, entitled 'Essays in Revolt,' coming out with Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. shortly.

With reference to the Booksellers' Guide of Correspondance which we noticed recently, we learn that Herr Karl F. Pfau, of Leipzig, the editor and publisher of the work, intends to have the English and French parts corrected by English and French writers.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. announce, in connection with the American publishers Messrs. Scribner, the early publication of a new edition of the novels and stories of Iván Turgénieff. There will be sixteen volumes in all, each volume newly translated from the original Russian by Isabel Hapgood, who also contributes a Preface to each volume. Mr. Henry James has written an Introduction to this edition. The frontispiece illustration to Vol. 1 is a portrait of Turgénieff, and the other volumes will contain photogravures on Japan paper from drawings specially made for this edition.

Mr. P. G. Wodehouse, who has already several boys' stories to his credit, is about to publish another with Messrs. Adam & Charles Black. It is called 'The Head of Kay's,' and is a public-school story dealing with the reformation of a very slack house, with an unpopular housemaster, by its new head-prefect. It describes cricket and football house-matches and the inter-house athletic sports, and several chapters are devoted to a description of the life at the Public Schools' Camp at Aldershot. The illustrations are by Mr. T. M. R. Whitwell.

Mr. Arthur Symons has made some translations of the 'Petits Poèmes en Prose' of Baudelaire. It will be issued shortly by Mr. Elkin Mathews in his 'Vigo Cabinet' series.

Mr. Heinemann announces for the 22nd of this month a new colour-book containing reproductions of Mr. Rackham's drawings to 'Rip Van Winkle,' which created quite a sensation in the spring at the Leicester Galleries.

'The Story of Pet Marjorie,' the 'bonnie wee croodlin' doo' whose poetic fervour and naïveté captivated the heart of Sir Walter Scott, was published only a few months ago, but a new edition is already called for. The opportunity has been taken to embody new matter, including Dr. John Brown's 'Marjory Fleming' and original illustrations by Warwick Brookes. The newly discovered 'journals' of Pet Marjorie, with the child's innocent observations on men and things, are also included. Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co. will publish the book next week.

A new Political History of England is announced by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. It will be in twelve volumes, demy 8vo., each of about 500 pages, with its own index. The twelve volumes will be by twelve different writers, chosen as being specially capable of dealing with the periods they deal with.

The Duchess of Buckingham and Chandos is publishing with Messrs. Black a book of stories for children which are an interesting tradition in her family history. The title is to be 'Willy Wind and Jock and the Cheeses,' and the tales are real children's stories of the good old sort, which have been handed down verbally from generation to generation. Her Grace, who says she can remember them word by word, has written them down as they were told—first to her grandmother, then by her to the Duchess's mother, who in turn passed them on to her children and grandchildren. The volume will be illustrated in colour by Mr. J. S. Eland; there will also be a miniature portrait facsimile of the first teller of the tales.

Messrs. William Hodge & Co., of Glasgow and Edinburgh, have in the press ready for early publication a series of Notable Scottish Trials, comprising most of the causes celèbres of last century.

Dr. C. F. Grindrod, of Malvern, has put together some interesting exercises in metre which he entitles 'Studies in Rhyme and Rhythm.' It will be published immediately by Mr. Elkin Mathews.

Messrs. J. Clarke & Co., of London, published on September 15, as a 2*s.* 6*d.* net volume, a new edition of the late Dr. R. F. Weymouth's 'Resultant Greek Testament,' of which his now well-known 'New Testament in Modern Speech' is a translation. The book is daintily printed on thin paper, and is beautifully bound.

A new series of reprints is announced by the Library Press, the new publishing house that has scored so signally this year with the sixpenny 'Cameo Classics.' This series will be known as 'The Beauties of Literature,' and will be fully illustrated by first-class artists. Two volumes will be ready in September—'The Beauties of Shakespeare' and 'The Beauties of Sterne.'

Messrs. Adam & Charles Black are about to issue 'Normandy' as the first volume in a new and cheaper series of 'Colour Books.' The illustrations have been reproduced in facsimile from drawings by Nico Jungman, who excels in the delineation of types of humanity and of costume. The text is by G. E. Mitton, who is the author of several 'London' books and was associated with Sir Walter Besant in his great 'Survey of London.'

THE BOOKSELLING TRADE.

It is a sorry outlook for the bookseller when the grocer round the corner gives away a copyright novel by a popular author with a quarter of a pound of tea, but that, it seems, is now being done by an enterprising suburban tradesman, who varies the literary gift according to the quantity of tea purchased. The tea merchant is only following in the footsteps of the draper and the dealer in fancy goods, but his development of their idea is not without its hidden meaning. It is significant that this irregular traffic in books is increasing every year, and, if it does not eventually undermine the legitimate trade—as some authorities believe it must do in time—it will undoubtedly make it harder than ever for the bookseller to pay his way. We may denounce the competition of the grocer and draper as unwarranted, but to a large extent the bookseller has himself to blame. At the Paris conference of publishers, M. Baranger, of Paris, admitted that the complaints which had been made as to the lowering of the professional level of the book trade were justified by facts. Professional booksellers had deserted, and their places had been taken by men who had rushed into the business unconscious of its difficulties and possessing neither theoretical nor practical knowledge—often after failing in other things. It is an old complaint, this deterioration of the bookseller. Roger North refers to it in his life of his brother John:—

'Little Britain [he writes] was, in the middle of the last century [the seventeenth], a plentiful emporium of learned authors, and men went thither as to a market. This drew to the place a mighty trade, the rather because the shops were spacious, and the learned gladly resorted to them, where they seldom failed to meet with agreeable conversation; and the booksellers themselves were knowing and conversable men, with whom, for the sake of bookish knowledge, the greatest wits were pleased to converse; and we may judge the time as well spent there as (in later days) either in taverns or coffee-houses, though the latter hath carried off the spare time of most people. But now this emporium is vanished, and the trade contracted into the hands of two or three persons, who, to make good their monopoly, ransack not only their neighbours of the trade, that are scattered over England; aye, and beyond the sea, too; and send abroad their circulators, and in that, manner get into their hands all that is valuable; and the rest of the trade are content to take their refuse, with which, and the first scum of the press, they furnish one side of a shop, which serves for the sign of a bookseller rather than a real one; but instead of selling, deal as factors and procure what the country divines and gentry send for, of whom each one has his book-factor; and when wanting anything, writes to his bookseller, and pays his bill.'

Edward Ballard—'honest Ballard, well known for his curious divinity catalogues'—was the last survivor of the old race of booksellers in Little Britain, and he died before the beginning of the eighteenth century.

Not that a revival of the old-world race of booksellers would meet the present needs of the trade. People have little time to gossip over their business nowadays. A bookseller can be well informed without being garrulous, but, above all, he must be businesslike. Unfortunately, as Mr. F. Macmillan has said, the occupation of retail bookselling becomes every day less and less congenial to the very class of men—active, intelligent, and somewhat bookish—which it is desirable to attract to the calling. The extension of the net system is doing something to improve the financial position of the bookseller, but more than that is needed to raise the professional level of the trade. Bookselling is passing through a period of transition; outsiders are gaining a firmer foothold in the business every year; and the regular practitioner must be able to show that he is at least as enterprising and businesslike as the go-ahead grocer and draper. The same difficulty has occurred in the retail trade in other countries, especially in the United States and France.

An American bookseller has just the same, and possibly more, difficulties to contend with. These are the large stores all over the country, who undersell him, and make it almost impossible for him to earn a satisfactory income. What is a small bookseller to do against such a monopolist millionaire as Wanamaker, who, by reason of his immense capital, is able to dispose of his goods so many cents cheaper? The result is that ere long the small bookseller will probably have to go. One of the objects of the new Association which was formed the other day is to watch over the interests of the small bookseller. Their task, it seems, will not be an easy one.—Literature, December 22, 1900.

MAGELLAN'S VOYAGE AROUND THE WORLD.

By ANTONIO PIGAFETTA.[*]

PIGAFETTA's account, the fullest and best authority for the famous Voyage of Magellan, is here completely presented in English for the first time. Pigafetta was an Italian of noble family, interested in navigation and fond of travel. Happening to be in Spain when Magellan was about to sail, he secured permission to accompany the expedition. Pigafetta kept a detailed account of the incidents of the voyage, and faithfully recorded his observations on the geography, climate, and resources of the numerous strange countries visited or described to him. Of especial value are his remarks on the customs, physical character, and languages of the various peoples of South America, and the Ladrones, Philippines, and other Asiatic islands.

Pigafetta's account, notwithstanding its great importance to students, has never been adequately published. Stanley, in his translation for the Hakluyt Society, omits many passages relating to the manners and customs of native peoples, mistranslates other passages, and furthermore does not translate from the original Italian, but in part from a defective French manuscript of later date and in part from Amoretti's garbled printed edition of the Ambrosian manuscript.

The manuscript used for this translation is the oldest in existence and is conserved in the Biblioteca Ambrosiana at Milan. This manuscript was purported to have been published in 1800 by Amoretti, but his publication was what the Italians call a refacimento, in which the order is entirely changed at times, to say nothing of the meaning. To ensure a correct version of the text, the editor, Mr. Robertson, visited Milan and undertook the transcription personally.

The numerous charts of the original are carefully reproduced, together with a rare early map, showing Magellan's discoveries in the Far East. To preserve the archaic forms and peculiar letters of the old Italian, type has been specially designed and cut for many peculiar characters. The editing and annotation are elaborate and exhaustive; an Index and a complete Bibliography are added, making this the best edition of Pigafetta in any language.

Issued in a limited edition of 350 copies only. Printed direct from type on Dickinson's deckle-edged paper. Two volumes, large 8vo., cloth, uncut, gilt top. Price $7.50 net.

SWEETS AND BOOKS.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Nation, 'O. T.,' writes:

Sir,—A book called 'The Candy-Maker,' published in New York city, tells us how a taste for ice cream can often be developed in a community where perhaps it had been before unknown. One might ask himself a similar question: How to develop a taste for good literature? I have no suggestion to offer, but, as I am a foreigner and spent my childhood days abroad, it is possible that some of my observations will be of interest to Americans.

I have sat hours in a variety store in New England, watching the children buying candy, but, although my observations run through a long period of years, I cannot remember a single case of a child asking for a book. It is true that they keep only dime novels in such a store, but the store-keeper has always a memorandum book in which he notes the articles for which there is a demand if they happen not to be in his store. A German lady who spent forty years in this country would often ask me, after a visit to an American friend of hers, What do they do in their bookless house? Now, when I was a boy abroad, we often spent our pin money on regular study books, such as in chemistry or in botany, or a grammar of a foreign language, &c. A short time ago I procured a Botany of a certain region, and immediately recognised it as the same one I bought while a child. What pleasant memories it recalled! I fancied myself standing again before a Parnassia palustris or an Epilobium angustifolium with that selfsame book in my hand. Verily, I say unto you, I derived as much pleasure from it as an American boy from swallowing his candy. I still follow the same pursuit, and am as unable as ever to answer the usual question, what is my object in doing it.

One of my chums bought on a similar occasion a copy of Virgil in Latin and learned it by heart. I have known people doubt a similar trait told about Euler. Infer digitum tuum huc et noli esse incredulus, sed fidelis. How many times I saw him, when asked to translate a passage in Virgil, take any book which happened to be at hand—an Algebra or a Physics—and translate from it his lesson in Virgil. Books in physics and chemistry were bought by the score, and the experiments described therein performed. While rummaging through the library of a teacher in a normal school in this country, I found as a rule only old books—a heirloom from her parents; and when a new book came to light, a card was sure to fall out from it indicating that it was a present from a friend. How often does one in this country encounter an elderly gentleman reading a book? I have often seen a former teacher taking a book out of her husband's hand, simple because, to her mind, it was an indication that he was growing childish. It is so seldom that one meets here a person who likes reading books that I do not wonder at my New England landlady telling me some time ago that I was nothing but a book. But I am afraid I have said enough already to arouse the anger of the Agrigentines, so that it is time to put a stop.

TRADE NOTES AND CHANGES.

MR. ERNEST DRACOTT, who was Mr. Grant Richards's chief country representative, has been appointed country representative to the new firm of E. Grant Richards. His autumn journey is, however, likely to be somewhat postponed, that he may be able to carry adequate samples of the firm's new publications. We understand that it is the intention of this firm to publish the majority of its books, with the exception of fiction, at net prices, and that terms as liberal as possible will be given to the trade.

CHAMBERS'S JOURNAL.

I REMEMBER its first appearance, our parents spoke of it as the very thing for family reading. This would be about 1833. Many of its successors have gone through birth and death: Chambers's seems as strong as ever.—E.M.J.

IN LIVELY COMPANY AT THE ZOO.*

Remembering the amusement we had derived from Mr. Walter Emmanuel's previous book, 'A Dog Day,' we gladly accepted Mr. Alston Rivers's invitation to a foretaste of his forthcoming work, 'The Zoo,' which is to be published on the 20th inst., and accordingly to the celebrated wild beast collection we have been in company with the genial author, while Mr. John Hassall has drawn our attention to some of the more marked (though generally unknown) characteristics of the animals in a series of highly animated illustrations.

Animation, indeed, may be said to be the prevailing feature of the publication. Mr. Emmanuel attacks his subject in a fearless fashion that entirely elicits our admiration. For him the wild denizens of the forest have no horrors; one can almost imagine him shaking the lion by the paw, and surreptitiously taking a pull at the leopard's tail. But then it is something to have been fond of animals, as he tells us he has been all his life—familiarity, no doubt, leads to a species of contempt; nay, we almost imagine that when he advises his inexperienced readers on the approach of a wild beast to resort to the time-honoured method of lying down and shamming death, that he has himself tried this device and found it to pay. Perhaps it was a wild cat (or a tame one, they are ferocious beasts when on the prowl) that approached him; anyhow, the plan would seem to have been successful, since he is still alive to delight juvenile readers with his light-hearted acquaintance with animal peculiarities.

But we had not accompanied Mr. Emmanuel very far in his round of the show before we discovered that he is a man of strongly pronounced likes and dislikes, even in regard to his natural history researches. He respects elephants, for instance, mainly, it would seem, because they earn their own living; but he has no partiality for the giraffe. He thinks tigers much preferable to lions, because they have a better groomed appearance; the so-called monarchs of the forest having an antiquated look, suggestive of the idea that sawdust largely enters into their composition. They seem, moreover, to be affected by a most portentous sleepiness, which causes them perpetually to yawn. As for the rhinoceros, no one cares about him, and in this Mr. Emmanuel's tastes are in no way singular; but surely it is a little cruel of Mr. Hassall to depict one of the tribe, a particularly aged looking member, devouring, among other papers described in the text as 'rubbish,' copies of the present volume.

Mr. Emmanuel is undoubtedly amusing, if occasionally his merriment appears a little strained; but Mr. Hassall is even still more forceful, and it is to his efforts that the success which we anticipate for the book will be mainly due. Several of the illustrations are exceedingly comical, and they show an artistic skill, a capability of seizing on the salient points of a situation, which is bound to be appreciated by readers, old and young; the juveniles, on the one hand, realising their vigour, while their seniors will be attracted by the sly humour. Of these illustrations we are enabled through the courtesy of Mr. Rivers to give an example. Taken on the whole, A Scamper through the Zoo is likely to be attended by wide success.

From 'The Zoo' (Alston Rivers).

BALZAC'S 'CONTES DROLATIQUES' SUPPRESSED IN MANCHESTER.

Last week the Manchester stipendiary magistrate ordered the seizure of all the copies of Balzac's 'Contes Drolatiques' that the police could lay their hands on, and in consequence a few copies of the volume were taken from several booksellers, and a large number of a penny edition which had been issued in one of the outside divisions of the city. No bookseller has thought it to be his duty to contest the seizure, for reasons which can be readily understood; but the proceedings of the magistrate, nevertheless, open up a very difficult and important subject.

A magistrate, even a paid one, is not necessarily by virtue of his office a man either with knowledge of or a taste for literature, and if he is allowed autocratic power there is no telling towards what author's works his critical eye may be directed.

Without saying that we think the 'Contes' the most pleasant or enlightening reading, we may go so far as to say that if all copies found in these realms are to be destroyed, so must a very valuable portion of our literature, including the works of Chaucer, Shakespeare, and all the early dramatists, Sterne, Swift, Bulwer, as well as many of the works of the most modern novelists.

We have had the opportunity given us of examining this penny edition of Balzac, and confess that the object of its publication is a bad one, and the bringing out of three of the choicest (?) of the stories in this way is entirely bad and entirely to be discountenanced. It would certainly be to the interest of public decency that the edition should be suppressed; but then what about the complete edition of the 'Contes' which is to be found, either in French or English, in nearly every public library, and is certainly in the Manchester Free Reference Library? The question leaves us on the horns of a dilemma, a dilemma which the Manchester magistrate solved by seizing all the copies he could find of the complete volume, as well as the pamphlets, and allowing the names of some of the most responsible booksellers in the city to be branded as distributors of indecent literature.

A more stupid way of dealing with the one book or the other could not be devised. A better means could not have been adopted to promote the demand for a volume which the seizure of will certainly not suppress, and for a most undesirable penny book which, without any publicity, the police could without any difficulty have quietly put an end to. It is another example of the ignorance of the authorities as to the power of advertisement. They have created a demand which in one way or another, for better or for worse, is certain to be supplied.

MISS CORELLI'S BOOK FOR 1906.

Miss Marie Corelli asks us to inform the book trade that, in spite of rumours to the contrary, the novel she is now writing will be the only one issued from her pen in 1906, that it will be quite as long as 'Barabbas,' and the publishers of this one and only book will be Messrs. Constable, of St. James' Street, Haymarket. We congratulate Messrs. Constable.

For all Newspapers, Magazines, and Periodicals send your subscriptions to Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., Cannon House, Bream's Buildings, London (established 1809). Catalogue gratis.

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

A Jocose Wag—Master Danglefield.

What a droll, freakish, laughter-loving, mirth-exciting wag is this man Danglefield! Leering out of the corners of his playful, rolling, funny, jet-black, penetrating eyes—pleasantry, wit, humour, and fun oozing from his peculiarly curved lip—a pardonable satire mingled with every word he utters, till business forsakes its cares, and all the room is in an uproar, convulsed by involuntary laughter and a commotion uncontrollable.

He is indeed a very slave to jesting; and not unfrequently compelled, from his playful and sportive disposition, to encounter that which, but for his tact and consummate drollery, might be productive of consequences anything rather than playful, but which his waggish and determined raillery wards off and prevents, occasionally even to his own advantage, and much to the chagrin and mortification of the would (but cannot) be offended antagonist.

In truth, no man can be seriously angry with him; for his satirical merriment is so entirely free from mischief, and his frolicsome loquacious bearing so decidedly harmless, that the anxieties of travel are for the moment forgotten, and to some extent desirably relieved by them; while the well-provided repast is enjoyed with keener relish, and digested with more advantage to the inner—ay, and to the outward—man, through the mirth he inspires by his dry, farcical, and reckless roistering. He can, however, when possessing the will, talk rationally, and deliver his sentiments with tolerable propriety upon general subjects; but his indomitable passion for the ludicrous—for travesty in all its forms—prevents him rendering justice to either his opponent or his argument. He seems impelled to deviate from his position, losing the thread of his discourse, determined to find something to laugh at or burlesque; and I verily believe that, so innate and deeply rooted is this propensity, he has but little if any more control over his risible faculties than an insane man has over those of his intellect.

It sometimes happens that men are strangers to him, or not in a mood to listen to his sportiveness; but his gamesome tendencies acknowledge no check; and when I have seen others, or been myself, disposed to a more quiet and sedate humour—from his discovering in our very cast of mind and determination to remain in a state of calm repose, a something, either real or imaginary, to excite and amuse our attention. At such a time his sallies are so smart, and made up of such excellent material withal, as to compel even a stoic to enjoy, and participate in, their richness.

'Our lungs like Chanticleer's have crow'd again,'

Danglefield is a man, indeed, in whose manner and conversation there is a higher strain of pleasantry and humour than in those of any other I ever met with in the commercial world. His yarns, parcels, and anecdotes are composed of such extraordinary ingredients, and so well wrought out—his jests, of the very first water, are uttered with such admirable effect—and his sayings are in many instances so peculiarly and decidedly his own, that he stands forth as a distinct and singularly original character, in defiance of the attempt of hundreds of others to portray similar eccentricities. As Widdicombe is superior to all other buffoons who aim at a display of the ridiculous, so is my hero superior to all his compeers, who sink into insignificance by comparison.

Such a disposition to the ludicrous is, I am aware, offensive to, and never can receive the sanction of, a quiet, steady-going class of men; yet I am acquainted with no better business man than Danglefield, with all his drollery; and his sonorous voice, swarthy complexion, playful intention, and merry, winning aspect, are infinitely preferable to the sour, monotonous bearing of those who, in consideration of their quietude, claim for themselves a superior position. So long as man shall exist, to make up the motley group of which human nature is composed there must be men of all sorts. Of necessity, therefore, there must be such as Danglefield; and long may he live to enliven our circle, adding to our amusement, without detracting from our comfort, portraying vividly the character so inimitably drawn by Shakespeare when he says—

'A merrier man
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal:
His eye begets occasion for his wit:
For every object that the one doth catch
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest;
Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor),
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant to his tales,
And younger hearings are quite ravished;
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.'

Letters to the Editor

[We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our Correspondents.]

'KNOWLEDGE IN A NUTSHELL' &c.

Dear Sir,—You notice in this week's Circular Webster's 'Little Gem Dictionary.' The details so correspond with our 'Knowledge in a Nutshell,' which is about half the size, I am tempted to send you a copy of it, of which we have recently printed an edition embracing the last census, &c. It sells at 2*s.* 3*d.* net, cloth; or 2*s.* 8*d.* net, leather.

You may not remember this little book, but it has a steady sale.

We have also pleasure in sending you a copy of our little novelty for this season: Tennyson's 'Poetical Works,' all the non-copyright pieces in one volume. 1*s.* 6*d.* net in cloth, and limp lambskin 2*s.* net; or an edition on thicker paper, 4 volumes, limp lambskin in brass clip, 5*s.* net; 4 volumes, limp lambskin in slip case, 4*s.* net.

These are all printed on the Oxford India paper.—Yours very truly,

David Bryce.

Glasgow: September 11.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS IN CANADA.

Dear Sir,—In your editorial note prefaced to the extract from the Glasgow Herald in your issue of the 2nd inst. you hazard the guess that, my firm having sent you a copy of the paper, I was likely to be the writer of the letter from which you quote.

I saw the note in your recent issue asking me, on my return from Canada, to say what was the meaning of this Act. Seeing that, although I had been several days in Montreal, I heard nothing whatever about it, and only as I was starting for home, when it was too late to make inquiry on the spot, did I get the first notice of it, I thought the best thing I could do was to call your attention to the letter in question, which seemed to me to be written by one who knew what he was writing about. The credit of the letter, however, is not due to me.

I am, yours faithfully,

Edinburgh. J. S. Ferrier.

A WARNING.

Dear Sir,—Some weeks ago you published complaints from subscribers that a person named 'E. Brown,' writing from 9 Maiden Lane, was reporting books, obtaining cash in advance, and not supplying the books. I obtained one of this man's postcards and published it, in facsimile, in Part 4 of 'Book-Auction Records,' and have in consequence received the following letter from another of your subscribers: 'This man is working under various names and addresses, but the handwriting and composition are always the same. In my case the name was R. Perry, 2 Landor Road, Clapham, S.W. A friend of mine received a report in same handwriting, but a still different name and address. I sent cash with order, but got no reply.'

The above information may be of use to subscribers of the Publishers' Circular if 'E. Brown' is still pursuing his evil courses.

Yours faithfully,

35 Pond Street, Frank Karslake.
Hampstead.

Notices of Books

From Messrs. J. Baker & Son, Clifton.—'French Genders Conquered.' The arrangement of this card betokens a keen sense of the difficulties attending the acquirement of the French language, and it provides an ingenious method in condensed form of overcoming one of its most formidable obstacles. The aim of the card, we are told, is to reduce 'the chaos of the different arrangement of rules in different grammars into some kind of order,' and towards this end it very efficiently contributes.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co., Ltd.—'The Eternal Life,' by Hugo Münsterberg. The task of approaching the opposite side on questions of religious belief is always a difficult one. Anything like condescension, familiarity, or superior conviction has to be avoided. We scarcely think Professor Münsterberg's opening to this little volume is quite happily conceived. There is an air of writing down to the comprehension of the devout reader, of treating him as a limited, tradition-bound subject. 'Don't be afraid, my man,' the words seem to convey, 'we are really at one; I have no desire to destroy your ideals; listen and I shall easily explain all your objections to scientific deductions away.' And very adroitly the Professor does this, showing that science has to do with facts, religion with subjects. In other words, science concerns our immediate life, religion has to do with the future, about which science can pronounce no definite opinion. The book will well repay perusal, and may be commended as setting forth the attitude of science towards a future state in a clear light.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'By the Lord Beloved,' by Baroness Orczy. A story of a remarkable character. Two old schoolmates, one of them son of a well-known Egyptologist, set out in search of the lost people of Egypt, erroneously supposed to have perished in the wilderness. Aided by an ancient papyrus which the elder Tankerville has practically put together from dust, they struggle unaccompanied across the desert many hundreds of miles; beginning their journey at Wady-Halfa, and ultimately, when almost at their last gasp, reach a wonderful city whose precipitous walls apparently render entrance impossible. However, no difficulties are unconquerable to such warriors as these, and they enter the town after an extraordinary fashion thoroughly befitting to the occasion. Their appearance within the stronghold is simultaneous with an impressive religious ceremony, the presiding personage being the inevitable high priest, and the chief spectators the reigning Pharaoh and his mother, Queen Maat-Kha. Tankerville, who has sheltered himself behind the idol of the great God Ra, suddenly discloses himself to the fanatical assemblage at an opportune moment and declares that he has been sent from the gods to sit upon the throne of Kampt. In this way he saves his life and that of his friend. Then follow a series of startling, awe-inspiring events, not altogether unassociated with amorous entanglements, and ending with the escape of the explorers and their return to this country. If occasionally the language scarcely rises to the dignity of the situation, the Baroness Orczy is to be complimented on having written a romance of vivid, descriptive force, warm in its colouring, and enthralling to the last chapter.

From the same.—'Fortune's Wheel,' by George Long. We are afraid the would-be exciting incidents of this story are not very convincing, and should Mr. Long aspire to become a successful novelist he must take a shrewder, deeper observation of life, besides cultivating a more vigorous style. The hero is the son of a banker, and engaged to a beautiful girl. The father falls into financial difficulties and the engagement is broken off. Son enlists in the army, and is sent out to South Africa, where the Zulu War has broken out, in the same regiment being an unscrupulous rival suitor for the young lady's hand. Father retrieves himself by winning an immense sum over a hundred-to-one chance in the St. Leger, but too late, son beyond recall. The latter, under very curious circumstances, becomes the white chief of a native tribe, and performs many deeds of striking valour. Wicked rival returns home and reports him dead, by this stale manœuvre carrying off the spoils. Hero eventually follows him. Tableau! But this is not all, for the hero, slighted by his former love, goes out to Egypt, and has further adventures. Then the strings of the puppets are drawn in the right direction, and general happiness is the result. Fortune's wheel is kept very busy the whole time.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The Fall of the Cards,' by R. K. Weekes. Mr. Weekes's power of devising a dramatic situation is very evident in this novel. The most prominent character is a tempestuous headstrong gambler, with whom playing cards has become a positive mania. Inspired by his love for a woman, he makes a determined effort to reform, and, strangely enough, it is she who leads him back into his old vice. For she is a novelist and is anxious to know what the gambling fever is like, so that she may accurately depict it in one of her characters. Afterwards, she is so regretful for her action that she promises to marry him—it is the least she thinks she can do in expiation of her offence—though not really attached to him. Subsequently she finds that she does care for some one, and from this the trouble proceeds. A pair of entertaining subsidiary characters are found in her half-sister Willy, whose jaunty, matter-of-fact disposition is admirably in keeping with her nickname, and a rough, masterful friend of the gambler, fashioned a little on the lines of Charlotte Brontë's Rochester; and the account of their wooing furnishes the lighter moments of the story. Everything comes right in the long run, and the gambler, we are glad to find, does none of the foolish things usually associated with the part in fiction, but settles down to a wholesome, cleanly life and—abjures cards. There is not much substance in the story, but the plot, though slight, combined with the dexterous manner in which it has been unfolded, will be found to hold very effectually the reader's attention.

From Messrs. P. S. King & Son.—'The Brassworkers of Berlin and of Birmingham—a Comparison.' Joint Report of R. H. Best, W. J. Davis, and C. Perks. Between the covers of this paper-bound volume are recorded the observations and conclusions arrived at during a visit to Berlin, which was instituted for the purpose of inquiring into the physical and industrial condition of the brassworker in that city as compared with that of the same worker in Birmingham. Sometimes the report would seem to get a little outside the prescribed limits; but it is difficult in a work of this kind to keep one trade distinct from another, since in so many social matters their interests are identical. The book contains much that should prove interesting to those engaged in the brass trade.

From Mr. John Long.—'In Old Northumbria,' by R. H. Forster, with eight illustrations by R. C. Reid. We must honestly confess that Mr. Forster's verse seems to us much inferior to his prose. Of his novel 'The Last Foray' we have in particular many pleasurable remembrances. But though the theme of his present work is sufficiently heroic—so far, at least, as pertains to the first and last of the three pieces composing the volume—he never seems to rise to the height of it, is never carried away, so to speak, by the ardour of his muse. Even the description of the deadly combat between King Oswald, as champion of the English forces of Northumbria, and Cadwallon, the Welshman, is lacking in grip and fails to thrill the reader by force of its intensity. There are some good lines in the second of the pieces, 'Alchfleda,' which relates the wooing of that lovely Princess by the regal Peada, and the ultimate conversion of the Prince to Christianity, but the general impression is in no way remarkable.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Fighting Ships,' founded and edited by Fred. T. Jane, 1905-6 (eighth year of issue). Interesting and practical though this work has always been, it should never prove more attractive to the general public than in its present issue. The war between Russia and Japan has directed renewed attention to the advantages of naval supremacy, and indirectly to the position occupied in this respect by other prominent nations. Mr. Jane's book is divided into three parts, the first treating of the navies of the world, their relative positions as judged by strength, and the coast defence navies in geographical order; the second comprising articles on naval progress during the last twelve months, with a special contribution on 'Warship Engineering,' by Charles de Grave Sells, M.Inst.C.E.; and the third containing revised rules of the Jane Naval War Game. Several of the changes made in this edition, more especially in regard to gunnery and armour, are of an important character and make for improvement. The photographs show a distinct advance, and it is intended in the future, we understand, to illustrate the book, as far possible, with impressions taken within four or five months of publication. Other indications of the extreme care exercised by Mr. Jane in his control of the work are apparent, and a feature to which we should particularly draw attention is the articles on the war in the Far East supplied by combatants, with photographs specially taken. Those who would know something about the navies of the world could scarcely do better than consult this volume, which is a perfect treasure-house of information.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Confessions of Lord Byron,' arranged by W. A. Lewis Bettany. This is, as the title-page informs us, a digest of the large edition of Byron's letters and journals, preceded by a very able introduction from the pen of the compiler. In this Mr. Bettany deals at some length with the extent and variety of the literary allusions which the letters contain. In the perusal of these extracts the reader obtains a very striking idea of the poet's almost hysterical temperament; here we may find pungent humour, caustic epigram, good stories, and apt quotations; pugnacity and pride are strangely mixed together; always ready to do a good turn for his friends, and taking indeed much pains in their interest, of himself he is cynical and morbid, complaining always that he is sombre. It were, however, impossible here to deal adequately with the great interest this book arouses; it should be read and appreciated.

From Messrs. George Philip & Son, Ltd.—'Paper Modelling: a Combination of Paper Folding, Paper Cutting, and Pasting, forming an Introduction to Cardboard Modelling.' We have nothing but praise for this practical little volume, which takes up paper modelling from its first beginnings and describes its construction through a series of stages until the more advanced forms are reached. The diagrammatic illustrations of such a volume constitute one of its main features, and in the present instance they are admirably executed.

From Mr. Alston Rivers.—'A London Girl.' This is the first of a series of stories which are to appear under the generic title of 'Tales from the Great City.' The author desires to preserve for the present his anonymity, but the publisher assures us that he is regarded as a writer of promise. However that may be, he certainly takes himself seriously and intends to put before us a series of stories dealing with life in London at the present day. This first story is frankly the tale of the making, rise, and fall of a prostitute. Starting as a barmaid, as near soulless as we can conceive a human being, she passes through St. John's Wood, the leading music halls, Piccadilly, the Strand, and Euston Road, to die gin-sodden in a filthy room in the arms of her mother, who has travelled the greater part of the same journey. That in many respects this may be a true tale of a London life we cannot deny, but it is equally true of most, if not all, other large cities; it is unfortunate that the author should have chosen so unsavoury a subject, and one in no way typical of London, for the first of his series.

From the Walter Scott Publishing Co.—'Jesus in London To-day,' by Mortalis. It is quite evident that the Metropolis of the Empire must be in a very bad way if we may judge from current comments in the public press. In the book before us we are again introduced to another of those characteristic studies, in the form of fiction, for bringing home to us certain unfavourable aspects of our national life. In his earnest endeavour to point his moral the author lays bare many palpable evils of our day that urgently call for remedial measures. Such publications, we admit, are not likely to find favour with the majority of readers, but nevertheless we commend the book to all those with an ardent desire for the speedy regeneration of our race in cities and towns.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'Shakespeare's Christmas, and other Stories,' by 'Q' (A. T. Quiller-Couch). Undoubtedly the best of these stories is the first, but, though very powerfully written, with an arrangement of material and descriptive skill which could only come from an experienced master of the pen, we scarcely think even it is quite up to the usual form exhibited by the author. The scene is the last performance of the Burbages at the theatre in Shoreditch, on Christmas Eve, 1598, with the removal of the playhouse, when the curtain has fallen, to Bankside. Prominent among the spectators is a loud-voiced, burly countryman, whose efforts at applauding the performance and afterwards in removing the structure are equally overwhelming. This it seems, when we have arrived at Bankside, is John Shakepeare, father of the poet, but whether Shakespeareans will thank Mr. Quiller-Couch for his portraiture of the gentleman from Warwickshire we take leave to doubt. Nor does Shakespeare himself appear in a much more favourable light. As here depicted, he would seem to be a man of a highly practical, not to say commercial, turn of mind, greatly concerned in the affairs of the farm, the price of malt, and the cost of repairing a chimney. But the riotous life at the Bankside, the carousing of the players, the utter want of law and order, is very graphically and picturesquely described. The other stories in the volume, if suffering from the drawback previously pointed out, have all their good points, and the illustrations, of which there are eight, are vigorous and effective.

From Mr. Chas. J. Thynne.—'The Worship of St. Philomena: a Nineteenth Century Roman Cult,' by the Rev. E. D. Cree, M.A. The author very early in his work points out 'that nothing whatever is known about St. Philomena but "Peace be with thee, Filumena," painted on a tomb in the Roman catacombs, and that, though it might seem strange to some people that anyone should be clever enough to write a biography on so small a foundation as this, it is quite an old art, the secret of which belongs to the Roman Church.' Clearly, therefore, the book is of a strongly marked partisan character, and such it proves on further investigation to be. All we need further say is that Mr. Cree writes very trenchantly, making full use of his command of satire; and that his work impresses us more as a clever attack on the Roman Catholic Church than as an honest endeavour to get at the truth. Sword play in matters of religion, we think, is to be deprecated.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Driven!' by Margaret Watson. The plot of Miss Watson's story is a little unsubstantial, but her knowledge of the agricultural labourer and the life that he leads makes ample amends for this defect. Poaching occupies no unimportant place in the narrative, the village innkeeper's cellars being used as a hiding-place for the spoil, and as the perpetrators become more confident in their nefarious exploits, a house robbery is the next action. The innkeeper has an attractive daughter who is attached to George Webb, a farm labourer out of work. George has a rival in one of the poachers who, aided by a misunderstanding between the lovers and the agricultural depression, sets his mind to accomplish the lad's ruin. This he does by persuading George to join the gang of poachers. The rest can easily be imagined, George falling into the hands of the police. However, the story ends quite happily. It would certainly have been improved by rather more movement, even at the expense of fidelity to real life. The existence of the farm-hand is not usually associated with much excitement.

From the same.—'Old Tales from Rome,' by Alice Zimmern. Readers, more especially of youthful years, will find these stories founded on the fables and legends of Rome very delightful company. The volume is divided into three parts. In the first Miss Zimmern relates with the rare charm that proceeds from perfect simplicity the wanderings and adventures of Æneas from the fall of Troy to the combat with Turnus and the founding of Lavinium; while Part II. continues the narrative through the early years of Rome until, with the expulsion of the kings, we reach a period where fable is merged in history. Of the stories in Part III., Miss Zimmern explains, some are of Italian origin, others belong to Greece or Asia, and the reason for their inclusion is that they are by a Roman poet and essentially Latin in spirit and treatment. The volume is well and suitably illustrated, besides being adorned with numerous headpieces and initial letters, and in the matter of its all-round production calls for favourable mention.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., Ltd.—'Fauconberg,' by Sir William Magnay, Bart. There are few men even in fiction to whom it is given to make two unsuccessful attempts at suicide, but such a one is the personable young hero of Sir William Magnay's novel. In the first instance he has come to the last resources of a handsome property, having continued the work of depletion commenced by his ancestors; the mortgagee has foreclosed, and is about to take possession; nothing remains but suicide; when he is confronted one lonely night by the mortgagee himself, who unwittingly takes the glass of poisoned wine intended for his creditor. In the second case he has fallen deeply in love with a high-souled beautiful girl, and an old flame, despised and revengeful, comes along and informs his inamorata of all his past misdeeds, considerably over-coloured. This time recourse is had to a pistol, but the old flame, stricken by remorse, intervenes at the critical moment and the bullet enters her body instead of his. The character of Fauconberg, high-spirited and impulsive, with little balance or will power, is very effectively drawn, and there are several excellent foils to his individuality, perhaps the most notable being the self-sacrificing Paul Hascombe and the cold-blooded polished man of the world, Murray Lydford, but there are others. While we can scarcely rank 'Fauconberg, with the best of Sir William Magnay's stories, it yet possesses in a marked degree that spirit of adventurous romance which has done so much to render the author popular with readers of fiction.

From Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—'Wild Flowers Month by Month in their Natural Haunts,' by Edward Step, F.L.S. Vol. 1, with 165 illustrations reproduced from original photographs by the author. This is one of the most interesting Nature books we have read. Mr. Step is so well known for his work on popular botany that we expect something above the average from him, and are not disappointed. Nearly all the illustrations are remarkable for their clearness and beauty, and we have never seen a better collection of half-tone blocks. In this volume the author takes us through woods and lane and field from March to June, and most enjoyable the rambles are. We shall look forward to completing our walks with him in the latter part of the year.

New Editions.—The marvels of present-day cheap productions are increasing. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. have issued an edition of 'The Diary of Samuel Pepys,' with an Introduction and Notes by G. Gregory Smith, that should cause the old time lover of the English classics positively to gasp with surprise. The paper is good, the printing (from the press of Messrs. R. & R. Clark, of Edinburgh) admirably clear, and the binding both strong and artistically designed. As for the text, it is a little late in the day to speak of that, but we may at any rate commend the part Mr. Gregory Smith has played in the production.—'Elementary Brushwork Studies,' by Elizabeth Corbet Yeats, has been sent out in a new and enlarged edition by Messrs. George Philip & Son. The book contains twenty-four beautifully coloured plates and eight photographs, with descriptive letterpress. If the pupil is not stimulated to exertion by such a work as this, we fear there is little hope of his success along this plane of study: for the naturally gifted it should be most helpful. From the same publishers we have received a copy of the third revised edition of 'Philips' A B C Pocket Atlas-Guide to London,' an excellent work which should especially be of service to the stranger in London, not to speak of a large number of the residents.—'The Danger of Innocence' fully deserves the designation of 'flippancy' bestowed upon it by the author, Mr. Cosmo Hamilton, but none the less the work is extremely entertaining, and the public, we are sure, will welcome a popular edition published by Messrs. Greening & Co.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd., we have received four more volumes of their capital series of English School Texts—'Sinbad the Sailor,' 'Tales from the Arabian Nights,' 'Raleigh's Discovery of America,' and 'Gulliver's Travels.' With the last comes also the welcome announcement that in consequence of the wide field opened out the publishers have been able to reduce the price to sixpence; as we have before remarked, they are admirable little books both for school and home.

From Messrs. T. C. & E. C. Jack we have received four more volumes of their 'Told to the Children' series, comprising 'Tales from Chaucer,' 'Stories from the Faery Queen,' 'Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and 'The Pilgrim's Progress.' We spoke very highly of the first volumes, and these are equal in excellence; the charming covers have only to be shown to ensure their selling.

The Publishers' Circular

THE TIMES BOOK SCHEME.

WITH reference to our article in the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR last week on the new departure of the Times newspaper in connection with the circulation and sale of books, we think it is only fair to our contemporary to give what we believe is the Times view of the way the scheme will act.

In the first place, the Times buys the books on ordinary terms from the publishers, getting naturally the best terms they can. The Times has signed the net book agreement, which refers only to net books, and if they desired to harm retail booksellers they could sell non net 6*s*. books at 4*s*. or 3*s*. 6*d*., but the published details respecting the scheme show that only the 25 per cent. that every bookseller gives, or may give if he chooses, will be allowed by the Times.

Then as regards the disposal of those books. The Times view is that it is obviously to their interest to get books to circulate as often as possible—that is, among as many subscribers as possible. It is not to their interest to sell books at all except at full prices, because so long as a book is in any demand they are bound to keep copies for subscribers, and are not likely to sell, as secondhand copies, books which subscribers are asking for. But when the demand has practically ceased, or a book has been in use so much that it cannot be sold as a new copy, then it will be sold as a secondhand book, but not before those conditions are accomplished, and this is what other circulating libraries have done for years.

The Times view, as expressed in their prospectus, is that a book must have about a month's use before it can possibly become secondhand; but it does not follow that because it has had a month's use it will be so sold, although a month's use would probably mean that it is three months' old — been, say, on twelve journeys to different people, and been lying about on the shelves for some days' interval between each journey. Even then it does not follow that the book will be classed as secondhand—some people are careful of books, some are not. If a book has the good luck to go to people who are careful, and if the book is still alive, it may be six months before it goes into Class B. On the other hand, some reader may drop it into her bath or put her tea-cup on it, and in that case it can no longer be sold as a new copy, and, always supposing it is no longer in demand, the Times then claims the right to sell it as secondhand after, say, a month's use, which may be three months or more after publication.

With reference to our remark that if the Daily Mail account of the scheme was quite correct—viz. that people could keep books as long as they liked, and might thus get a new net book at 50 per cent. off or more—it is clear from the prospectus issued by the Times that this is not possible, because it appears that each new book as it goes out is placed in Class A, and remains in Class A until the Times reduces it to Class B. It must be sent back to the Times before its class can be changed, which will not be done so long as it is in good condition, nor even if soiled provided there is still a demand for it from readers.

We believe this is a fair statement of the Times view of its scheme. To say that we do not think it can be made to pay is discounted by the fact that the Times itself declares that the 'deliberate object of the scheme is spending money instead of making money.' Of course indirectly it expects to make money by gaining new subscribers and increasing its large and powerful circulation—to advertisers one copy of the Times is worth hundreds of most other papers—and so to get more advertisements at increased rates.

The Times, it seems to us, forgets that this statement that it will lose money over this bookselling scheme intentionally is in direct opposition to its other statement that the new scheme is not intended to interfere with either libraries or booksellers, and will not do so. How can concerns established in order to make money compete with one established to spend money and by the sale of the same things? Suppose the Times, in order to get new subscribers, offered to set up wires and send telegrams at half the Post-office rate. What would St. Martin's-le-Grand have said to Printing House Square?

THE YARN OF OLD HARBOUR TOWN.*

MR. W. CLARK RUSSELL'S NEW STORY.

'Have you ne'er heard the yarn of Old Harbour Town?
She was sweeter than Hinda or Haidée;
When the hatches were flush, with good victuals, and lush,
The captain made sail with the lady.'
Old Rymes, 1835.

MR. W. CLARK RUSSELL'S latest story, the first edition of which was sold before the day of publication, is one of the brightest and best which he has given us for a long time. As frontispiece, we have a beautiful house supposed for the purposes of the story to be the home of the charming heroine, Lucy Acton. This picture gives additional interest to the work, inasmuch as it is a view of the famous Widcombe House, Bath, designed about 1640 by Inigo Jones, and made ever memorable by the fact that in the room with the oval window in the pediment Fielding wrote 'Tom Jones.' No greater admirer of Fielding ever lived than Mr. Russell, and it was certainly a matter of great satisfaction to him to be able in such a pleasant, although indirect manner, to connect his story with Fielding's masterpiece The 'Yarn' begins on a bright April morning on the lawn in front of the house, where we are introduced to Captain Acton, his daughter Lucy, and Rear-Admiral Sir William Lawrence, a neighbour and friend. The period is that memorable year 1805, when the country was expecting that every man would do his duty if Napoleon attempted his threatened invasion—a period which gives the author full scope for his inimitable word-pictures of naval officers and naval scenes. The time covered by the story is only a few months, but we doubt if there exists a more vivid representation of English life as it was a century ago on the sea and in a quaint old western harbour town. We all know with what power and never-failing freshness Mr. Russell can paint the sea and all that pertains to it, and there are bits of landscape work in this story, brief sketches though they are, which make us wish he would oftener turn his gaze inland and give us more such pictures as that of Old Harbour Town and the country round it. Then as a painter of sweet English maidenhood Mr. Russell is hard to beat. As Lucy, stepping on to the lawn, is described by him we get as attractive a picture as one could wish for, a picture 'charged with the colours of youth and health and a sweet and delicate spirit of life.' We notice that one reviewer has blamed Mr. Russell for mating his charming heroine with such a man as Captain Lawrence, but we think most readers will agree with us that the course of their love story is a perfectly natural one. Lawrence, a son of her father's friend Admiral Lawrence, is a handsome, brilliant naval officer who had ruined his career in the navy by one singular and characteristic act. When returning to his ship at night somewhat the worse for his potations, he knocked the sentry into the harbour, and immediately sprang after him and saved his life. Dismissed the service, the young man gives way for a while to drink and gambling. Although clouded for a time, his good qualities, given a chance by Lucy's father and strengthened by his love for her, re-assert themselves, and in the end he gains her hand.

---

* The Yarn of Old Harbour Town. By W Clark Russell. (London: T. Fisher Unwin.)

We need not recount the main incidents of the story, which take place at sea and afford our author full scope for utilising his chief power and chief charm. Some cold-blooded critics may object that Lucy's lover loses all claim to sympathy by his mad attempt to make her marry him by carrying her off to sea with him against her will; but the ladies are the best judges of such actions, and before and since the Rape of the Sabines they have shown that such forceful lovers are not disliked. If the lovely Lucy, womanlike, forgives and loves, why should her reclaimed husband still be a villain for us? Gold must be tried in the fire, she saw the good and noble qualities of the splendid man, and saved them and him. But the love story, as in most of our author's novels, is never insisted on for long; it is there when wanted, and, like the British ensign on one of his ships, goes fluttering aloft on important occasions, but its main use is to enable Mr. Russell to fill his pages with picture after picture of life at sea such as no other writer can give us.

It surely was a happy thought in this Nelson year to make the schooner on which are Lucy, her father, and Admiral Lawrence, who are chasing her lover ostensibly to punish him, though in their hearts they love him still—it was a happy thought to make the schooner meet with that immortal eleven sail of the line and three frigates which under Nelson himself were this time just a century ago chasing Villeneuve half over the world. Some day some master of the brush will paint this heart-stirring scene of the meeting in mid-ocean of the little English schooner carrying English naval officers, who adored Nelson, as all his countrymen and women adored him, in a way, it is said, we cannot even understand, so great and deep was it.

The appearance and movements of the British Fleet, the short dialogue between Nelson on the Victory and old Admiral Lawrence as the schooner passes the great battleship—the whole thing is wondrously well done, done as none but a sailor and a genius could do it. It is a picture 'full of grandeur that borrowed majesty from the sense of the power and the empire the ships symbolised.'

Mr. W. Clark Russell's new story is worth a shipload of the ordinary fiction of the day.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

EARLY in October Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. will publish an account of the South Polar Expedition, 1901–4, under the title 'The Voyage of the "Discovery."' The work, in two royal 8vo. volumes, is written by Captain Robert F. Scott, C.V.O., R.N., and is fully illustrated with coloured plates and other illustrations. The 'Discovery' was, we are informed, the first ship ever built in this country especially for exploration. In an absence of three years her company spent more than two beyond the Antarctic Circle and two winter seasons at a point 400 miles beyond any former wintering party. This work promises to be of the greatest interest.

'Dante the Wayfarer' is the title of the new book by Christopher Hare, the author of 'The Most Illustrious Ladies of the Italian Renaissance' &c. In the Preface the author says: 'I have followed the poet step by step throughout his wanderings, telling the story of all the men and women he met by the way, and gathering together the legends which sprang up like flowers wherever his footsteps passed.' The work, which is profusely illustrated, is published by Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

Sir Wyke Bayliss's new book 'Seven Angels of the Renascence,' announced for publication on the 28th of this month by Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., is the work of many years and the ripe fruit of an artist and a scholar. This book is the record of the lives and works of men who bore the stress and strain of the day during that great revival of art which had its beginning in the fourteenth century, culminated in the fifteenth and sixteenth, and lapsed altogether in the seventeenth century. It may be looked upon as a successor to the same author's 'The Likeness of Christ Rex Regum,' for where that leaves off this begins. The illustrations include portraits of the greatest of the painters and poets, to which are attached facsimiles of many very rare and interesting autographs.

'A History of the American Civil War,' treated mainly from a strategical standpoint, has just been issued by Messrs. Methuen. Its authors are Mr. W. Birkbeck Wood, M.A., late Scholar of Worcester College, Oxford, and Major J. E. Edmonds, R.E., D.A.Q.M.G., and there is an Introduction by Mr. Spencer Wilkinson. It is well equipped with strategical maps to illustrate the various campaigns, and tactical plans accompany the account of the chief battles.

It is not often one comes across a fine example of Russian printing, especially in the way of an illustrated work. There is something just as rare in a finely produced Russian translation of an English book. This exceptional compliment has been paid to Miss Bessie Hatton's 'The Village of Youth,' which is dedicated to the modest young English authoress by Madame Milorodovitch, wife of his Excellency the Governor of Poltalva. It is published in quarto size, and daintily illustrated by Russian black-and-white artists. Few books of fairy tales in our time received more appreciative notices from the English press. Madame Milorodovitch sends an édition de luxe to Miss Hatton with a message of 'affectionate appreciation from her unknown Russian admirers.'

It is particularly appropriate that in the centenary year of Nelson's death a cheap edition (6*d.*) of Robert Southey's 'Life of Nelson' should be issued. Apart from its historical interest, the book should prove welcome to many on account of its delightful style and the fact that it is the best biography of its length in the English language. Messrs. Methuen published it in their Standard Library on the 21st.

Professor Church's new story for boys is to be called 'The Crown of Pine.' The hero is a young athlete who is a successful competitor at the Isthmian Games. It is a story of adventure in Corinth and Rome during the times of the early Christians.

Under the title of 'The National Gallery of British Art (The Tate Gallery),' Messrs. Cassell & Co. are about to publish an illustrated and descriptive record of one of the most popular of our public Picture Galleries. Among the large number of illustrations included in the volume will be a series of twenty-four Rembrandt photogravures of some of the best known pictures. They include works by Millais, Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Leighton, Mason, and Von Herkomer. An introductory chapter is contributed by Sir Charles Holroyd, the keeper of the Gallery, and the text, while dealing with the growth and development of the various collections which the Gallery contains, resolves itself into the story of Modern British Art.

We are informed by Messrs. T. Nelson & Sons that they have to-day arranged to issue to the trade the latest volume in their new series of Sixpenny Classics, viz. 'Adam Bede.' This book is printed in large type, bound in cloth, and contains nearly 600 pages. We understand also that the demand for this series of books has been so great that it has been impossible to keep pace with trade requirements. Very large reprints of the first six titles have now been made, and orders both for these and for the aforementioned new volume are being executed in rotation.

The late Mr. Augustus Hare's work on Sicily has long been out of print. Mr. St. Clair Baddeley has revised and added to it in an edition which Mr. Heinemann will publish on the 29th inst. Every year an increasing number of visitors go to this wonderful island, and this book, though in the best sense an invaluable guide-book, is far more, treating of the history of the country as well as of the various places of interest.

'What!' said Lamie. 'Another Illustrated Edition!' Those are the opening words of the Poet Laureate's Preface to a new edition of 'The Garden that I Love.' The new edition is more than justified by the fine set of illustrations which Mr. George Elgood, R.I., has made for it. They have been reproduced in colour, and have received the warm approval of the Poet Laureate, who says they have given him much pleasure. The volume will be published by Messrs. Black.

Mr. Frank T. Bullen's new volume 'Back to Sunny Seas' will be published by Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. on the 26th inst.

Mr. Unwin has just published an important work by Dr. J. A. Harvie-Brown, the well-known Scotch naturalist. It is entitled 'Travels of a Naturalist in Northern Europe,' and describes journeys by the author in the lesser known parts of Norway, in the Archangel region, near the mouth of the Dvina, and in the district of the Pechora River (Northern Russia). The object of each expedition was mainly ornithological, and valuable and extensive lists are given of birds and eggs observed in the various regions visited. There is also a section devoted to the Samoyeds. There is much in these volumes to interest the sight-seeing tourist, and they will appeal not only to the naturalist but to the shooter of game and wild fowl. The volumes contain maps, coloured plates, and many other illustrations.

Mr. Edmund Mitchell's new novel entitled 'In Desert Keeping,' which will be published by Mr. Alston Rivers on the 27th inst., deals with life in California at the present day.

Publishers who have not had proofs of their Advertisements and Announcements for our

ANNOUNCEMENT NUMBER,

SEPTEMBER 30,

should kindly apply for same at once.

Mr. William Downing, of Birmingham, informs us that in the September number of the Chaucer's Head Book-Catalogue, are 'advertised, at exceptionally low prices, volumes suited to all tastes, and to all seasons, to all moods and to all hours, from the brilliant misty mornings of autumn to the deep dark of winter nights. In addition to the general character of the works noted in the list is a small and valuable collection of volumes relating to the antiquities, archæology, history, folk-lore, and legends of Wales.'

In the forthcoming number of the Hibbert Journal, Professor Anesaki, of Tokyo, Japan, will contribute an article on 'How Christianity appeals to a Japanese Buddhist,' in which he pleads for a closer union of the two religions for the purpose of raising the ethical standard of the world. In the same number an article by the editor (Professor Jacks), entitled 'Is the Moral Supremacy of Christendom in Danger,' will deal with the rising in Japan in its bearing on the ethical and religious problems of the West. Among other articles in this number may be mentioned the first of a series on the 'Working Faith of the Social Reformer,' by Professor Henry Jones, of Glasgow; 'Authority and Theology,' by Principal P. T. Forsyth; 'Life, a Hypothesis and Two Analogies,' by Sir Oliver Lodge; 'Mechanism and Morals, the World of Science and the World of History,' by Professor James Ward, Cambridge.

The August number of the Canadian Bookseller and Stationer is its 'coming of age number,' and certainly reflects great credit on the Maclean Publishing Company. It includes over a 100 pages of matter and advertisements; accounts of Canadian publishing houses are given, with portraits of publishers and booksellers. It gives one the impression that the bookselling and stationery business is sharing in the general good trade which Canada has enjoyed for some years now. The fact that Canada is fast becoming the granary of the Empire is full of promise for the continued prosperity of the country; last year even the United States had to import grain from Canada.

A work entitled 'Russia and its Crisis,' by Professor Paul Milyoukov, was published by Mr. Unwin on the 18th inst. It is the result of long years of study devoted to the explanation of the Russian present by the Russian past. Everything discussed in the book converges to the one aim of explaining the present crisis. But the conditions which have brought on the crisis are so deeply rooted in the past, and are so closely interwoven with every aspect of Russian life, whether of religion or of politics, of doctrines or of institutions, of social forms or of the composition of society, that an explanation of the present situation, to be at all adequate, must necessarily be a general picture of Russia and a general description of the conditions under which its civilisation has developed. The crisis will pass, but the conditions of civilisation remain; and the author's ambition has been to explain, not the momentary and transient, but the permanent and lasting elements in the political, social, and religious life of Russia.

The Auto-Cycle Club will hold their Annual Race Meeting at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, on Saturday, September 30. A full account of this meeting, well illustrated, will be included in the issue of the Motor Cycle for October 9.

Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd., have just published the 'Quick Calculator' (Currency Reductions), by R. Klein, and recommend the book to the business world as a practical and handy means for the quick reduction of prices of goods, rates of freight, custom duties, &c., from various systems of currency and weight into others. The book leaves nothing to be desired in the matter of careful work, good print, &c., and is sold in handy pocket size at 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

The New Album is the title of a new sixpenny monthly magazine of women's interests. It will be published on the 25th of each month 'to fill a much-felt void in fashion publication, as it depicts by pen, pencil, and camera "all that is newest" in the trend of the London and Paris mode, and is edited by a well-known fashion authority (the late editress and originator of Coming Modes).' It will be printed by Messrs. Spottiswoode & Co. Ltd., New Street Square, E.C., and published at 3 and 4 Clement's Inn, Strand, W.C.

Two new volumes are to be added this autumn to Messrs. Black's series of Animal Biographies: 'The Cat,' by Violet Hunt, and 'The Black Bear,' by H. Perry Robinson. In this series the life stories of animals are written out of the fulness of firsthand knowledge, each by an author who has made the particular animal of his choice a familiar friend, and has earned the right to be its spokesman.

'The Idyllic Avon—a description of the Midland river and of places on or near its banks from its mouth at Tewkesbury to above Stratford-on-Avon—by John Henry Garrett, is about to appear with every place upon or near the river Avon through about fifty miles of its course vividly described as it may be found to-day, and the main points of its history reviewed. Stratford is originally described, and a chapter devoted to Shakespeare's connection with it illustrated with eighty-seven whole-page pictures and two maps; the volume is also of quite unusual artistic merit. Dr. Garrett is a native and resident of Cheltenham, and speaks from a lifelong acquaintance with his subject, which has enabled him both to write and use his camera to particular advantage. Messrs Putnam announce the work.

Professor James Stalker has written a new Preface to the cheap edition of his book, 'The Two St. Johns of the New Testament,' which Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., published on the 22nd.

May we suggest to our excellent contemporary, the Hospital, that the next time it does a supplement in connection with 'Hospital Sunday' it should give a translation of the article 'Une Visite aux Hôpitaux de Londres,' which appears in the Revue des deux Mondes for August 15. It is charmingly written, evidently by an expert, and full of compliments—e g. 'Les règles des infirmières y sont analogues à celles des autres hôpitaux, très caractéristiques, je crois, de d'esprit anglais, fait de méthode et de poésie, de confortable et de mysticisme, la constante antithèse de ce peuple, du haut en bas de l'échelle sociale.' Vive l'entente cordiale!

In George Bancroft's Letters in the October Scribner's there is a long description of an interview which he had with Lord Byron, in which he says, 'I hardly know if I ever talked with a man so frankly. Of himself he spoke with the utmost openness, of his success and his enemies.' In regard to the origin of 'Manfred,' Lord Byron said that some time before he had conceived the idea of his piece Monk Lewis had translated to him some of the scenes of Goethe's 'Faust.'

It is a bold question to ask, but, as in the case of other classics, how many people nowadays read the full Don Quixote throughout with enjoyment? It is not so much that it is a big book (for big books may sometimes be enjoyable), but that its bigness is largely due to numerous digressions and side-stories having little or no connection with the main narrative, and possessing but slight interest for the casual reader. It has, therefore, occurred to Mr. Dominick Daly to abridge Cervantes' great composition by selecting and translating the more interesting and amusing parts, keeping up the continuity of the narrative as a whole by introducing here and there a few words or sentences to bridge over the gaps caused by any omissions. The volume will be illustrated in colour by Mr. Stephen Bagot De La Bere, and will be published in a few days by Messrs. Adam & Charles Black.

'The Age of the Earth, and other Geological Studies' will be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin on Monday. The author, Mr. W. J. Sollas, one of the foremost of English geologists, is Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford.

Of Dr. Rendel Harris's latest volume, 'The Guiding Hand of God,' a third edition has been published.

Messrs. James Clarke & Co., of Fleet Street, will publish on Tuesday a new 6*s.* novel by David Lyall, entitled 'The Rise of Philip Barrett,' also a new 6*s.* work by J. Brierley, author of 'Ourselves and the Universe,' entitled 'The Eternal Religion.'

On Monday, Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will publish a sensational work by the Baroness Orczy, the well-known author of 'The Scarlet Pimpernel.'

'A World without a Child' is the title of Mr. Coulson Kernahan's new book. 'It tells of a godless and dying world where spring brings with it no new bird, no new beast, no new child. It tells, too, how God, wrestling with God in prayer, answers the agonising cry of the world without a child, until it hears once again the sweet clamour of little voices calling "Father! dear Father?" As a conception, "A World without a Child" is so strikingly daring and original that it is likely to be more eagerly discussed and more widely read than any of its predecessors. It deals not only with religious, but with social and ethical questions which concern the very existence of our race.' The publishers are Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Mr. T. Sealey Clark, of 34 Craven Street, Strand, announces the forthcoming publication of an important new theatrical annual, to be called 'The Green Book, or Who's Who on the Stage,' which will form a valuable addition to the existing works of reference. 'The Green Book' will be a handsome volume of about 400 pages, and will contain something like 2,500 condensed biographies (compiled from direct personal sources) of the leading members of the dramatic, musical and variety professions, including managers, agents, proprietors and musical directors. The editor is Mr. Bampton Hunt, late of M.A.P. The work will be illustrated with first-class full-page and other portraits of the leading figures on the English stage.

Mr. Cornsby, the well-known missionary in China, who is editor of the Chinese Weekly and Chinese Christian Review, has just issued a book through the Methodist Publishing House entitled 'In Touch with Reality.'

President Roosevelt's article in the October Scribner's will be entitled 'A Colorado Bear Hunt,' and will describe the expedition which he made last April.

CRICKET—LONGMANS v. MURRAY.

On Saturday, September 16, an interesting cricket match took place between the houses of Longmans and Murray at Raynes Park. The Murray eleven went in first and made 90, Longmans replied with 82; thus a good game resulted in a victory for the house of Murray by 8 runs. For the victors the best scores were made by W. Farquharson, 24 (not out); S. Kent, 26; J. F. Bulley, 17. For the losers Cutbush, 28; Minet, 13; and Hebbiss, 12. The bowling honours fell to Cutbush, 5 wickets, clean bowled, and Rolfe, 4 wickets, for Longmans. Kent, 5 wickets, clean bowled, Griffin 2, and J. Farquharson 2, for Murray.

Gilhofer & Ranschburg, of No. 1 Bogenerstrasse, Vienna, will sell by auction, on Friday the 27th and Saturday the 28th of October, an important collection of over six hundred works, including manuscripts of the eleventh to the sixteenth century, and printed works from the fifteenth to the eighteenth century. EMPLOYEES' TRIBUTE TO MR. JAMES BELL.

Mr. James Bell, of Edwalton House, has for forty years been the principal proprietor of the old-established printing, bookselling, and stationery business of Messrs. J. & H. Bell, Limited, Carlton Street, Nottingham. The business itself is a hundred and five years old, and it was in celebration of these two facts that a social gathering took place at Mr. Bell's charming country residence on Saturday. The employés of the firm had arranged to present to Mr. Bell an illuminated scroll, headed '1865-1905,' and referring to his skilful and wise control of the business, combined with uniform kindness to all the people in his employ, which has personally endeared him to all of them.

The afternoon was occupied with various games, walks, visits to the Church of the Holy Rood, and a cricket match, 'Married v. Single'; and after tea, which was taken in a marquee on the lawn, Mr. A. E. Moore, who has been prominent in the organising of the presentation, asked Mr. Bell's acceptance of the address. He mentioned that the business was started, probably in 1800, by Stephen Glover, and was taken over by Mr. W. G. Deardon in 1825. Since Mr. Bell acquired it in 1865 a second shop had been added, the buildings had been remodelled, and the business had been transferred to a private limited company, while 1901 saw the acquisition of additional premises in George Street.

Mr. H. R. Turner (committee secretary) having also spoken, Mr. Bell feelingly replied and the company joined in singing 'Auld Lang Syne.'

For the evening there was a concert arranged, to which contributions were given by a glee party, Miss Bell, Miss Enser, Messrs. H. Bell, A. E. Moore, W. Wood, J. Copeland, A. B. Timms, H. E. Cousins, E. Page, M. Terry, A. H. Shepherd, J. T. Newton, and J. Simpson.

THE LATE MR. THOMAS ADAMS, GISBORNE, NEW ZEALAND.

Thomas Adams was one of the oldest and most respected booksellers in New Zealand. He established himself as a bookseller and stationer in Gisborne as far back as 1872, and the business under his continued care has gradually grown to be one of the finest and most up-to-date in New Zealand.

From the time of his first starting in business the present writer has been in constant correspondence with him up to his death, at the age of seventy-two, on February 20 last, and can bear testimony to his character as a man of strict integrity and uprightness. Although personally unknown, his handwriting had become quite familiar, and was a true indication of his business qualification and his straightforwardness. It is pleasant to learn that the business is being carried on uninterruptedly by his son, Mr. J. R. J. Adams, who had previously gained valuable experience in the house of Messrs. A. Cowan & Sons, of Sydney.

THE LATE MR. THOMAS ADAMS, OF GISBORNE.

A NEW BOOK ON BURMA.

Burma, although nearly 300,000 square miles in extent and the largest of all the provinces of our Indian Empire, inhabited by a people at once attractive and picturesque, and combining in its scenery rich architectural features, fine mountains, broad majestic rivers, as well as primæval forests of intense beauty and interest, is perhaps one of the dependencies of the British Crown about which people know the least. Mr. Talbot Kelly's book, which will be published in a few days by Messrs. Black, will go far to dispel this apathy. He treats his subject critically and sympathetically, and, above all, his pictures in colour will enable the reader to form a vivid conception of the nature of the scenery and the conditions of life in this most interesting country.

'THE LIVING RACES OF MANKIND.'

From some particulars given with Part 1 of their great new 'Living Races of Mankind,' we learn that it has taken many years to collect and classify the vast amount of valuable and interesting material used in this work, and the actual photographs from life have been obtained with much labour and expense from every quarter of the world. The pictures speak for themselves, and certainly no such perfect or complete representation of the living races has ever before been attempted. This work comprises a popular account of the existing races of the world. It tells how these widely scattered and interesting peoples live and what they do; describes their habitations, dress, ornaments, and weapons; their games, sports, and pastimes; also their religions, feasts, ceremonies, and superstitions; as well as their general characteristics, manners, and customs, especially those connected with their birth, marriage, and death. The actual forms and faces of the great human family, as now existing, together with their natural surroundings, are presented truthfully and vividly, a result not to be found in any previous book on the subject, the whole forming a stupendous work of absorbing interest for all time.

The 'Living Races of Mankind' is finely printed throughout on English art paper in the most artistic manner. The letterpress is written by eminent specialists and travellers, maps are included, and a superb coloured plate given with every part. The entire work, in twenty-four fortnightly parts of thirty-two pages at 7*d.* each, will comprise about eight hundred pages, with about eight hundred illustrations, including twenty-five coloured plates, besides maps, &c., for the small cost of about 14*s.* There is no doubt this work will be a great success, and Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.'s enterprise thoroughly deserves it.

FATHER BENSON'S NEW NOVEL.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., announce a new novel by the author of 'The Light Invisible' and 'By What Authority'—Mr. Robert Hugh Benson, one of the late Archbishop's talented trio of author-sons. The title of the story is 'The King's Achievement,' and in it he depicts English society at one of the most dramatic epochs in British history —the period when Henry VIII., greatly daring for a Tudor monarch, defied the power of the Papacy. Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, Sir Thomas More, and Bishop Fisher of Rochester, as well as the King, are some of the characters to which the author introduces us. Apart from the consummate manner in which Mr. Benson depicts the religious and political intrigues of the age, the book is rich in its romantic appeal and quick at every turn with resistless human interest. The book will be published by the Pitmans on the 28th inst.

DEATH OF DR. GEORGE MACDONALD.

We regret to record the death of that well-known writer of fiction, poet, and mystic, Dr. George MacDonald, in his eighty-first year. He was born in December 1824, and died September 18, 1905.

The following extracts from the Times' account of his career will be interesting to many readers:

'George MacDonald was one of the most characteristically national writers that Scotland has produced, and of his assured place in the history of Scottish literature there can be no reasonable doubt. The story of his life is soon told. George MacDonald was born at Huntly, in Aberdeenshire, in 1824, the son of a miller and farmer, whose wooden leg loomed large in the child's early recollections, and who lived to see the dawn of that child's fame. His family claimed descent from the MacDonalds of Glencoe. George MacDonald grew up at home, amid the magnificent scenery which he afterwards loved to describe in his books, until he was old enough to be entered at King's College, Aberdeen. A contemporary of his has recorded a significant incident of his student life. Walking one Saturday with a number of other young men near Aberdeen, MacDonald saw a drover cruelly beating one of his beasts. He ordered him to stop, and when the drover merely laughed he took off his coat and gave the man a thrashing. Of the university as it was then George MacDonald afterwards drew a vivid picture in his poem, "Hidden Life," which Sir William Geddes styled a classic epic of student life at Aberdeen.

'George MacDonald's first book, a poem entitled "Within and Without," appeared in 1856. He said afterwards that this beginning brought him in as much as £20, and thus encouraged him to adopt a literary career. He followed it up with "Poems" (1857); "Phantastes," a fairy tale (1858); and "David Elginbrod" (1862). The last named was described in our columns at the time as "the work of a man of genius."

. . . .

'If George MacDonald was a preacher in his tales and songs, he was a poet in his preaching. For many years he spent the winter at Bordighera, where his house, Casa Coraggio, was a literary and social centre; but he was accustomed to visit England in the summer, and to preach in various London pulpits. He used at one time to lecture a good deal, and with him the spoken word was rendered additionally delightful to English ears by the sough of his native Aberdeenshire. In the later nineties his health broke down, and, though till quite recently he journeyed each year to Bordighera, his mind gave way, and he became only the ruins of the man he once was.

'To those who knew Dr. George MacDonald he always appeared something of the prophet, as may be gathered from the following description of his outward form written by a friendly hand: "A tall impressive-looking man, a little high-shouldered, and not without a tendency to Scotch gauntness; the head well shaped, the features fine, the whole expression noble; hair long and flowing to the shoulders, full beard and moustache, which, like the hair of the head, was grizzled."'

The following is a list, compiled from the English Catalogue of Books, of the works of George MacDonald, showing as far as possible the date of the first publication only in book form:—Within and Without, p. 8vo., 1855; Poems, 12mo., 1857; Phantastes, a fairy Romance, p. 8vo., 1858; David Elgenbrod, 3 vols., 1862; The Portent, p. 8vo., 1864; Hidden Life, p. 8vo., 1864; Adela Cathcart, 3 vols., 1864; Alec Forbes, 3 vols., 1865; Annals of a Quiet Neighbourhood, 3 vols., 1866; Unspoken Sermons, p. 8vo., 1866; Guild Court, 3 vols., 1867; Wow o' Rivven, p. 8vo., 1868; Disciple, and other poems, 1868; Robert Falconer, 3 vols., 1868; Seaboard Parish, 3 vols., 1868; At the Back of the North Wind, 1870; Miracles of our Lord, p. 8vo., 1870; Princess and Goblin, 1871; Ronald Bannerman's Boyhood, 1871; Wilfred Cumbermere, 3 vols., 1871; Vicar's Daughter, 3 vols., 1872; Gutta Percha Willie, 1873; Malcolm, 3 vols., 1874; St. George and St. Michael, 3 vols., 1875; Wise Woman, 1875; Exotics—Translation, 1876; Thomas Wingfold, 3 vols., 1876; Marquis of Lossie, 3 vols., 1877; Paul Faber, 3 vols., 1878; Sir Gibbie, 3 vols., 1879; The Diary of an Old Soul, 1880; What's Mine's Mine, 3 vols., 1881; Mary Marston, 3 vols., 1881; Castle Warlock, 3 vols., 1882; Gift of the Child Christ, 2 vols., 1882; Princess and Cardie, 1882; Orts, p. 8vo., 1882; Stephen Archer, 1883; Weighed and Wanting, p. 8vo., 1883; Donald Grant, 3 vols., 1883; Unspoken Sermons, 3rd series, 1884-89; Hamlet, a study, 1885; Book of Strife, 1885; Home Again, 1887; Elect Lady, 1888; Light Princess, 1890; Rough the King, 1890; Flight of the Shadow, p. 8vo., 1891; There and Back, 3 vols., 1891; Heather and Snow, 2 vols., 1893; Lilith, 1895; Rampolle, cr. 8vo., 1897; Salted with Fire, 1897.

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN.

New (1904) Edition.

The proprietors of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' will issue shortly a pamphlet which they have prepared dealing with some of the criticisms passed upon the new edition published in November, 1904, and explaining the reasons which led them to make changes which have been widely discussed. It will explain also in what way the proprietors propose to meet the wishes of those who are dissatisfied: while they maintain the new book without serious change, on the ground that the welcome that it has received from the press and the general public shows that their revision upon the whole is acceptable.

ON CATALOGUE READING.

[From a very pleasant twelve-page article on 'Catalogue Reading,' by Dora G. McChesney, in the September Monthly Review, we make a few extracts in the hope that they may send our readers to the article itself.—Ed. P.C.]

'I wonder sometimes why the discerning and sensitive reader should ever condescend to books while book catalogues are obtainable. The book catalogue is the dream, the ideal, the ever-alluring vision, beside which the library of actual books, be it Richard de Bury's or Locker-Lampson's, is but the dim and straitened real.

'Now and again the compiler of the catalogue puts in a touch of significant and unconscious satire. Who can forbear a smile at such an item as "Christian Morals; scarce"?

'Almost I am inclined to hold that the true catalogue reader should be above the materialism of buying; but that, I confess, is a counsel of perfection. Personally, I may avow that I buy when I can—and sometimes when by all the laws of right reason I cannot—and a catalogue is always a disappointment when it fails to afford a few agonising and almost irresistible temptations. Yet I can conceive of a true idealist who should enrich his imaginary library merely by reading and marking catalogues, and who should savour a subtle delight in constructing an entire book from the alluring and often illusive title.

'I am neither herald nor herbalist, but I delight in the pages devoted to those subjects; perhaps I delight in them the more because in that department I approach the ideal catalogue-reader and am content with the catalogue. To collect herbals and works on heraldy is to court speedy ruin, but their titles give charm to any list. Almost I prefer the herbals—herballs, they are more apt to call themselves, with their quaint, sweet-scented titles.

'It seems to me that the older a book is the more instant and vital its appeal to the imagination when it is encountered in a catalogue. Perhaps the truth of the matter is that later books tempt to more ordinary methods of enjoyment; one wants to buy and read them. But these antique tomes, so fascinating to the fancy, do not always prove rewarding in possession.

'Meantime, here on earth, we can read but few and possess still fewer of our desired books. Have I not sighed and dreamed over countless volumes which cried out to have me as their owner, and our mutual desire was all in vain? "The children of Alice call Bartram father," and my rare Civil War pamphlets, my Hakluyt and Purchas, my black-letter Chaucer and my complete Pater, repose on the shelves of the collector and the millionaire. In heaven perhaps, I shall have them for my own, sealed with an imperishable book-plate. Meantime I mark my catalogues.'

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

DINING WITH FARMERS.

Hitchin, Tuesday, Market-Day.—Invited, as I was alone, to dine with the farmers and corn buyers, but objected, from recollecting the annoyance I had more than once endured, when dining some years ago with a host of these ignorant, selfish, and uncouth creatures, at some of their public weekly feastings. On those occasions, the company—excepting the chairman, who was usually a good specimen of the fine old English yeoman—were, en masse, better entitled to the appellation of 'barn-door savages' than that of civilised men. The old adage of 'every one for himself and God for us all' could seldom have been more strikingly exemplified; for, in all probability, the majority of them had never, since the preceding week's cram, partaken of fresh meat or of savoury dish. Consequently, through their anxiety to have a taste of everything without being at the slightest trouble, or losing the smallest portion of time in carving aught upon the table, I was kept perpetually employed in filling their plates while they were as incessantly engaged in filling their mouths; capacious receptacles, which they were reckless about emptying, as they held across the table, upon their popular subject, muck or manure, a conversation so confused as to constitute a Babel in miniature.

My objections, however, to-day, were overruled by the landlord, who assured me that the dining party were gentlemen, and he felt persuaded I should enjoy myself in their society. And so I did; for the men were highly respectable in dress and deportment, and their conversation was at once intelligent, amusing, and instructive.

In their extended views, the old subject of manure wore another aspect; and soils, sub-soils, salt, soot, lime, guano, and every other natural or artificial restorative or invigorator of land, were as well understood, and as ably discussed, as though the parties had been collectively practical chemists. There was a total absence of the offensive habits manifested by their class in some districts, such as taking salt with their knives, picking of teeth with their forks, which would immediately find their way to the vegetable dish to assist some equally unscrupulous neighbour. Nor was mention made of the cabbage or turnips they produced, nor of the hogs they bred. Their ideas indeed were generally more extended; for little was said about the crops they raised, or the stock they fed; and in lieu of judging of the prosperity or depression of our country by the prices their fluctuating productions fetched at market, they were able to look further for the cause. Instead of contracted opinions upon great national questions, they were in possession of enlightened views and information upon both our agricultural and commercial polity.

Some few years, as intimated above, have transpired since I last dined at the market table; and I am consequently unable to judge whether the march of intellect have so diffused itself through all the agricultural districts as to have reached the respectable position I this day witnessed. If so, the improvement of the farmers must be to themselves no small advantage, while to society at large it must be invaluable. Certain it is, they are not the monotonous, unintelligent, narrow-minded beings they formerly were; for they have been made to think; and thinking brings with it a train of action which will improve the condition of any man, or of any class of men. In the instance I have been particularly referring to, instead of the company being all talkers at once, they deliberately conversed upon the leading features of the political world, evidently understanding and taking an interest in passing events in a manner superior to their ancestors. Wine, too, in moderate quantity, was consumed by the majority—and they mustered upwards of fifty. Yet more strange to say, the Indian weed was not at all introduced while I remained in the room; so that, inhaling a pure atmosphere, and not being lost or enveloped in smoke, their eyes were clear as their heads; and our ears were not offended by the clearing of throats or unpleasant expectorations.

A PUPPY—MR. SMOKEM COXEYE.

'O, wud some Power the giftie gie us,
To see oursel's as ithers see us!'

Newcastle, June 1843.—Manchester produced to-day, for our amusement, not the usual bustling, businesslike, Manchester man, but a facetious young gentleman, dressed (for his clothes were all good and well made) a few shades in style above the man of business, yet not quite up to the gentleman; or, rather, his love of show and variety of colour and pattern negatived the probability of his being one, while his aim at display and want of good taste gave evident proofs of his not being the other.

His coat, waistcoat, and trousers were all of different hues; and with the exception of the first, which was a brightish green emblazoned with flaming gilt buttons, all his garments were either checks or stripes, and even his cravat, or stock, with swelling and formidable front, was conspicuous for zigzags, diamonds, and circles; a finish, or perfect tout ensemble, being established by a large diamondless, but nevertheless brilliant and well chased, nobby pin, which, from the apparently careless manner, although chained, in which it was fixed, so projected in the foreground as to form, from its immense size and peculiar quality, an object of no slight attraction. His hat, too, with smallish brim, was so studiously put on as to cover only a portion of the head, allowing his luxuriant and well macassared hair to exhibit itself to no small advantage. After spending a very short time in his society, I found that his dress and address were in perfect accordance, for he was all small talk. Seldom, however, did he open his mouth in conversation without planting himself in such a position as enabled him to mark, by means of the opposite glass, the air with which he poured forth his good things; momentarily adjusting his collar, eking below the sleeves the often-pulled till much-soiled wristbands of his shirt, repeatedly porcupining his hair, and pointing his whiskers. And thus would he every now and then endeavour to catch a glimpse of his (to speak artistically) three-quarter-face in the mirror. That, in fact, while imagining himself the beau idéal of perfection, the resistless magnet of all around, was the grand object of his own exceeding admiration. The room was occasionally perfumed, too, by his unfurling—not a Bandanna for genuine use, but—a white muslin embroidered handkerchief, kept purposely for casting to the winds its odour, and for incessant exhibition, either in the hand, or as though by stealth and unknown to its proprietor, from the well curved breast coat pocket.

SWIMMING.

THE tenth annual costume gala of the Spottiswoode Institute S.C. is announced for Monday, October 2, at St. Saviour's Baths, Southwark. The open events for printing and allied trade swimmers are, as usual, the 200 yards Trades Championship and the 67 yards Handicap. Entries for both close to Mr. W. H. Marshall, 5 New Street Square, E.C., first post on September 28. The water-polo exponents will be teams of the City of Westminster S.C. and Southwark S.C.

WALLACE, BURNS, STEVENSON.†
APPRECIATIONS BY LORD ROSEBERY.

THE position occupied by Lord Rosebery warrants a hearty reception to this issue in permanent form of his address on 'Sir William Wallace, Robert Burns, and Robert Louis Stevenson.' These 'appreciations' were delivered on the occasions of the memorable Burns celebrations held at Glasgow and Dumfries on July 21, 1896; the initial movement to raise a memorial to R. L. Stevenson held in Edinburgh on December 10, 1896; and at the Wallace celebration held in Stirling on September 13, 1897. These addresses have been revised by Lord Rosebery, and are now published by his kind permission.

Numerous illustrations, specially prepared for this work and showing the places referred to by his Lordship in the course of his addresses, are included in the volume. Lovers of Scotland at home and abroad will doubtless welcome the opportunity of possessing these 'appreciations' of three noteworthy Scotsmen. There will be a limited édition de luxe.

A COMBINATION ASSOCIATION SUGGESTION.

Sir,—There is a lot of talk just now about bad trade in the bookselling business, but surely it should not be so very hard to remedy. Could not an Association of Publishers and Booksellers (bona-fide booksellers, that is, not drapers and grocers) be formed? The publishers and wholesale houses to supply books on terms that admit a 25 per cent. profit on every single copy sold; do away with odd copies, and special terms for large quantities, &c.; and to pledge themselves not to supply their books to any firm not in the Association. The booksellers on their part undertaking not to supply net books below published price, and 'ordinary' books at less than 2*d.* in the shilling discount (as is still done in many towns and might be made universal), and not to supply books that are not published by members of the Association. There is a similar Association between wholesalers and retailers of private greeting Christmas cards, I believe. That the scheme, if started, would meet with some opposition I have no doubt, but if all the leading publishers and booksellers joined they would be able to snap their fingers at drapers' and newspapers' books, &c., and we should not hear much more about the decline of the bookseller. That it would be to the advantage of the publishers no less than the booksellers if they gave better terms I feel convinced, for odd copies are very little inducement to give larger orders. Times out of number in my experience, when making up the orders at night, we should have ordered extra copies of books we were wanting had the terms been worth it, but almost invariably said we would wait until 'journey,' and order then, which frequently meant the order was never given at all. At the present terms booksellers will not, because they cannot afford to, take risks in ordering, and so keep their stock as low as possible, otherwise they would stock far more freely, and it would be better all the way round.—Yours, &c.,

A Junior Member of the Profession.
Oxford: September 16, 1905.

[Schemes somewhat similar to that outlined by our correspondent have been suggested before, and tried before, but for some reason or other have always come to nothing. The difficulty is to bring all publishers and all booksellers into line; some on both sides will stand out and prevent that general combination which alone can be effective. Then any combination of this kind should include the authors; some of the most widely read can command terms which make it impossible for the publishers to give better terms to the trade. The whole question bristles with difficulties; the introduction of the net system has done great good already to the majority of the booksellers, but even that is found to be unfair to booksellers who have to pay carriage for long distances, and we wish their just complaint could be considered and a remedy applied.—Ed. P.C.]

THE TIMES BOOK CLUB.

Sir,—With reference to the article upon the above subject which appeared in the Publishers' Circular of the 16th inst., it seems to me, after carefully reading the prospectus of the Times, that whatever benefit this new scheme may confer upon the paper and its subscribers, it must be detrimental to the circulating libraries and the booksellers. This fact seems to be so obvious as to require no argument.

If the scheme works right, both these classes must be undersold upon the face of it.

What is not so clear at first sight, but in my opinion is equally true, is that authors and publishers will also suffer, because it is to the interest of both that as many copies as possible of a new book should be sold.

In the case of fiction, at any rate, it appears more than doubtful whether the new departure will help to attain this object.

The easier it is made for subscribers to read and then buy at a considerable discount, the less likely is there to be a fresh demand upon publishers in the ordinary way.

I am, sir, yours faithfully,
A. F. G. Stirling.

A WARNING.

Dear Sir,—An impostor styling himself 'E. Brown' has again endeavoured to obtain payment in advance, reporting a magazine advertised for in your issue of September 16. His report was forwarded to me, and the handwriting is identical with that published in facsimile in 'Book-Auction Records.' I have now placed all the evidence in my possession in the hands of the authorities, who are taking immediate action in the matter, and they request any bookseller who has lost money in this manner to compare the handwriting, and to at once give information to the local police, or to communicate with me. For the common good all such vermin should be run to earth as speedily as possible.—Yours faithfully,

Frank Karslake.

WANTED—AN INSURANCE.

Sir,—This is an age of insurances. Their name is legion, but yet there is room. There is nothing in this wide world which house-owners dread, next to fire, more than a drain trouble; but there is no insurance, as far as I know, to meet this great want. Why not? I see no reason. All owners of house property, I feel sure, would embrace it, and small property owners especially, who would be relieved from the constant worry and terror of sudden, and often most inconvenient, expense, coming like a thunderclap, and an awful 'drain.' It would, indeed, be an immense boon. An insurance company well versed in the laws relating to house drainage would be in a position at once to command the most prompt, economical, and efficient methods, or such may take the form of mutual or co-operative insurance associations, who would become, in point of fact, 'experts.' 'Union is strength,' and such an insurance would be welcomed far and wide. It is a great public want. Where is our enterprise?

Think it out, ye wise ones, who have more time and experience for such matters than

Yours truly, T. Thatcher.
44 College Green, Bristol.

[We quite agree with Mr. Thatcher, and if our multitudinous contemporary the Daily Mail would copy his letter, between us something may be done. But the drainage system is much worse than the net book system—it bristles with difficulties. For instance, we know an angler who went to great expense in having his drains up on account of the smells, and then found it was a hard-boiled egg he had left in his macintosh pocket after his last fishing expedition. Would the insurance policy have covered a case like that?—Ed.]

'SKETCHES FROM THE DIARY OF A COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER.'

Sir,—I have read with much interest your extracts from 'Sketches from the Diary of a Commercial Traveller.' As I am not likely to be able to get a copy of the book I should be greatly obliged if you will tell me if he in any way states that the names are those of travellers who then were on the road, knowing most of those in our trade who were on the road in the Midlands from 1850 to 1860. I recognise Master Dangerfield, but not by that name.

If the book expresses that the names are genuine will you kindly note it in the next extract?—Yours very truly,

S. R. Wilson.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

Sir,—May I ask you to kindly aid this institution by notifying that:

The sum of £500 has been allocated to the Newsvendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution by Messrs. Gilbert W. Thomas and H. C. Scott, in the exercise of their discretion, as executors of the will of the late Horace Harral, Esq.—I am, dear Sir,

Your faithful servant,

THE LATE SEASIDE HOLIDAY HOME FOR BOOKSELLERS AND THEIR ASSISTANTS.

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me to tell your readers that I still hold about £50 of the funds contributed to the late Seaside Holiday Home for Booksellers and their Assistants? It was unanimously resolved at the general meeting called for the purpose that this balance was to be devoted to aid members of the trade recommended by, but not necessarily members of, the Booksellers' Provident Institution who were 'desirous of visiting a seaside home of rest, convalescent home, or other like institution.

If applications are made to myself I can promise they shall receive prompt attention.—I remain, yours faithfully,

JOSEPH W. DARTON.

'A WARNING.'

DEAR SIR,—I notice in this week's PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR under the heading of 'Warning' a reference to a person carrying on an underhand business under the name of R. Perry.

I trust Mr. Karslake and the readers of the article will not confuse me with the person mentioned therein, as I am, I believe, the only Robert Perry in the secondhand trade.

I may add that I have been with Mr. Francis Edwards of this address for over twenty years, and was previously with Mr. A. Jackson, of Great Portland Street, for five years.—Yours faithfully,

ROBERT H. PERRY.

'A DEFENCE OF PESSIMISM.'

Sir,—When an author finds the booksellers are refusing to take his book on the grounds that they previously know well enough what the book is like, this prejudice being supported by a misleading criticism in a trade journal of the standing and purpose of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, then surely there is just cause of complaint.

My booklet, 'A Defence of Pessimism' (Watts & Co.), contains no matter at all that warrants the adverse criticism which appeared in your issue of September 12. It is the more annoying, too, because precisely the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, as an impartial witness in the interests of the trade, should, before any other journal, have limited itself to a notice that did not influence booksellers against it.

My work is no shallow attack on religion. It affords a much needed stimulus towards providing Liberalism with a religion based on the thought of Schopenhauer. Your critic says of my matter: 'Schopenhauer is right and everybody else is wrong. That is the beginning and end of the argument.'

Such a horizonless falling foul is neither the beginning nor the end of the argument, which is very simply stated. A certain view of life most ably propounded by Schopenhauer affords Liberalism its true moral basis. My thesis and my limits are thus well defined, and a very interesting problem tapped for this rather faded age of controversy.

I am, your obedient servant,

DAVID IRVINE.

National Liberal Club.

[If any of our readers have been prejudiced against Mr. Irvine's booklet by our reviewer's remarks, we hope they will look at it for themselves. It is a mistake to connect Schopenhauer always with pessimism — in some respects he was as optimistic as any Japanese could be.—ED.]

Notices of Books

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'The Complete Works of Adelaide A. Procter,' with an Introduction by Charles Dickens. If a large number of readers do not avail themselves of this tastefully bound, well-printed edition in one volume of Adelaide Procter's works, then so much the worse, it may be said, for the literary appreciation of the age. Pervading her verse is a tender sympathy, a delicate insight into the higher emotions of human life, and a power of expression which can scarcely fail of cordial recognition by refined minds. The Preface of Charles Dickens will carry the more mature reader back to the days of Household Words and All the Year Round, and to old-time admirers of that author will in itself be interesting.

From Messrs. Blackie & Son, Ltd.—'A German Reader for Middle Forms,' compiled by W. Scholle, Ph.D., and G. Smith, M.A. Admirable works in 'First Steps in German' and 'First German Grammar' are here supplemented by a third volume, not by any means the least valuable of the series, in which a judicious selection of material has been shown. In the characteristics of careful printing, good paper, suitable illustration, and so forth, the book exhibits the excellent qualities which previous experience has led us to expect from Messrs. Blackie.

From the same.—'The Picture Shakespeare: Twelfth Night;' 'The Soldier's Historical Geography of the British Empire (adapted for Second-class Candidates),' by J. C. Ellis; 'Blackie's Script Figure Course B Arithmetic in Three Terms,' Books I., II., and III.;' 'Livy, Book V.,' edited by E. Seymer Thompson, M.A. ('Blackie's Latin Texts'); 'Glimpses of Napoleon,' extracted from 'La Canne de Jonc' by Alfred de Vigny, edited by W. Herbert Hill, M.A.; 'Les Enfants Célèbres—Napoleon II., Ambroise de Boufflers, Elisabeth Cazotte,' of Michel Masson, edited by Louis A. Barbé; 'Longer Poems for Recitation,' edited by Louis A. Barbé ('Blackie's Little French Classics') 'School Recitations (Seniors),' compiled by Margaret Riach, L.L.A. Of each of these small educational works a good opinion may honestly be expressed, but our space will not allow of our noticing the various volumes in detail.

From Messrs. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co., Ltd.—'Reflections of a Householder,' by E. H. Lacon Watson. These reflections extend over a variety of subjects more or less intimately connected with the house and its surroundings. There are, in the first place, a number of reminiscences of life previous to marriage, and these are followed by thoughts on cats, the minor worries of domestic life, the aspects of gardening, cookery, seaside holidays, burglars, chess, and so forth. In reading these delightful essays, in which Mr. Lacon Watson rather dallies with the different topics than treats them seriously, we have a distinct impression throughout of the author in a dressing-gown, slippers, and a smoking-cap, if such an article were now worn. The entire book tells of leisured ease, a mind of delicious domestic contentment which is satisfied to cull its thoughts in different pastures, straying just where fancy leads. It is not a great or profound volume, but it has just that element of gentle philosophy which will, without doubt, attract a considerable number of readers.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Poems: Miscellanies, The Mistress, Pindarique Odes, Davideis, Verses Written on Several Occasions,' by Abraham Cowley, the text edited by A. R. Waller, M.A. Scholars will heartily welcome this volume, which has been produced with an attention to detail that merits the warmest commendation. The text is that of the first collected edition of Cowley's Works, a folio volume (11½ ins. by 7 ins.) published in 1668, the year after his death, and among its contents are the 'four parts' which had constituted the earlier folio of 1656 referred to in Cowley's Preface. The book, as we have indicated, is in every way deserving of cordial appreciation.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'So Like a Woman,' by G. Manville Fenn. Readers already familiar with the books of this capable writer will find the one now before us a fresh evidence of the skill evinced by the novelist in the manipulation of the story and its dramatic development. The interest is chiefly centred in two brothers named respectively John and Will Clifford, residing at their home, 'The Alders,' on the upper reaches of the Thames, the former of whom becomes the unfortunate scapegoat for the latter's crime. Will Clifford, having by means of heavy gambling debts placed himself in the hands of Van Reale, a money-lender, is then viciously induced to forge his brother's name as the acceptor to sundry accommodation bills. The body of the money-lender is subsequently found in the river, and, after vain efforts to restore him to life and coherency, the incriminating documents are found by the police upon his person. Suspicion strongly points to John Clifford as the supposed murderer. He is duly arrested, tried, found guilty, and committed to penal servitude for life. After serving two years of his sentence, he effects his escape, through the friendly aid of a warder's wife, who has doubts of his guilt. John at once seeks out Marie, the only daughter of his firm friend Colonel Lisburn, whose love he had honourably won, but only to find that through jealous machinations his brother Will had already supplanted him as a rival and is soon to marry her. A stormy and recriminative interview between the brothers ensues, ending in almost the murderous capture of John. However, this is averted through a well conceived ruse of an old and faithful servant of the family. Eventually, Will justly endures a terrible expiation for his misdeeds; and, although we have refrained from relating the whole plot, the novel is brought to a most appropriate conclusion.

From The Clarendon Press.—'Elementary Modern Geometry. Part I.—Experimental and Theoretical (Ch. I.-IV.) Triangles and Parallels,' by H. G. Willis, M.A. It is always a pleasure in educational literature to come across a book which is the outcome of a thorough acquaintance with teaching. The present writer remembers with gratitude the master who first made plain to him the intricacies of Euclid, because he was thereby led to understand the reasoning of the various propositions, not to repeat them after a parrot fashion which was likely to be completely disorganised by an adroit question. Mr. Willis enters upon his work with a chapter devoted to the experimental and practical side of his subject. Afterwards he extends his survey to the purely mathematical methods to which the earlier portion of the manual has acted as a valuable preparatory course. No attempt, we may note, has been made to follow Euclid's sequence; the propositions have been allowed to fall into their natural order. Each proposition is followed by a set of exercises, and more difficult examples are inserted at the end of each chapter. Questions on Practical Geometry are given after Problems in the latter part of the exercises. This volume will be found to contain all propositions required for ordinary Pass Examinations.

From Mr. W. B. Clive (University Tutorial Press, Ltd.).—'Class-Work in French Composition,' by Ernest Weekley, M.A. The extracts from works by well-known authors given in this volume show excellent discrimination, being distinguished, for the most part, by a clear, decisive style which effectively lends itself to translation. But we should have been pleased to see the names of the writers given, which would not have increased the bulk of the volume and have added to its completeness.

From the same.—'The Primary Arithmetic, Part II.,' edited by William Briggs, LL.D., M.A. This will be found a very useful work, comprehensively designed, and likely to be of excellent service in schools.

From Messrs. Dean & Son, Ltd.—'The Black Barque,' by Captain T. Jenkins Hains, illustrated by W. Herbert Dunton. This is the first long story from the pen of the author of 'The Wind Jammers,' and is redolent of the sailor. The story is related by John Heywood, an American, who is tricked into joining the crew of the 'Black Barque,' otherwise the 'Gentle Hand,' engaged in the slave trade, and commanded by an old pirate, Captain Howard. The story is stirring and full of incident, while the brutality and callousness of crew and officers is fascinating in spite of its repulsiveness. As a picture of the brutal side of sea life it recalls Jack London's recent novel 'The Sea Wolf,' though in its details, and, except for a superficial resemblance in its characters, there is no repetition. 'The Black Barque' may not be such a fine character study, but it is more lifelike, and will probably please more readers.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Noreen: a Romance,' by Galloway Douglas. We are afraid we cannot honestly say much in favour of this story. The intention is without doubt admirable, the author at times showing an intimate acquaintance with prevailing methods, but the execution falls far short of the desired aim.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'Mr. Muldoon,' by Michael O'Donovan. The doings of the main actor in this story are amusingly described, though the author fails somewhat in imparting to his creation the true devil-may-care, rollicking aspect of the adventurous Irishman. Something of this is no doubt due to the lack of adequate local colouring, Mr. Muldoon and the other personages of the narrative expressing themselves after a fashion which at times seems to be as much Lancashire as Irish, or a combination of various dialects. Muldoon during the course of the story poses in various characters, as the urgencies of the case demand. Starting by stealing his uncle's bicycle in order to make his way to Dublin, he successively occupies the positions of servant to an aged clergyman, partner to a bookmaker, butler and general factotum to a fashionable physician, itinerant ballad singer, and caretaker on an evicted farm. In each of these situations he displays gifts which, though entertaining enough when confined to the pages of fiction, are fortunately not common in actual life. Eventually the rascal marries the well-to-do daughter of a publican, and with the departure of the happy couple on their honeymoon the story closes.

From Mr. John Lane. — 'Euphranor: a Dialogue on Youth,' by Edward Fitzgerald. This new volume in the book-lovers' library is very welcome. Fitzgerald is best known to readers of the present day by his 'Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam.' 'As in that he enriched the English language with an inimitable poem, so in "Euphranor" he gave us one of the most perfectly balanced prose compositions of the century,' says the writer of the Preface, Mr. Frederick Chapman, and we heartily agree with him and regret that this charming prose never came our way before. In addition to its literary charm, it is a most practical treatise on the education of a child, and we should like to know that every parent in the country had read and appreciated it.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—'The Cost,' by David Graham Phillips. This story is described upon its cover as 'a thrilling story of love and City life. The scenes on the Stock Exchange are full of sensational and dramatic situations.' This may be accepted as a fair description of the work, with the reminder that the City life and the Stock Exchange are those of New York. There is an interesting study of the development of two strong characters upon totally different lines: one becomes a money-king, the other a popular but democratic leader; in one the vices, in the other virtues are triumphant; between them, or rather ranged under them, are the weaker characters of all kinds. Perhaps the sheep and the goats are too markedly divided, and the characteristics of the leading actors are over-emphasised; but that is a necessity if we are to have the promised sensations—and these we certainly get. The final scene, where the money-king rises from his bed and, holding the telephone, directs his forces upon the Stock Exchange to the rout of his enemies and the ruin of thousands, and the regaining of his former wealth and power, only to fall dead as his success is assured, forms a fitting climax to his lurid life.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Rebel Prince,' by Seth Cook Comstock. An historical romance of the times of Queen Elizabeth and Sir Philip Sidney, full of incident and adventure. The hero, Dick Harrod, tells the story of how he was sent as an unavowed representative of the English Government to ascertain how things were going on the Continent, and what intrigues were being woven round the Prince of Orange. Love and hate are well mixed up, and plot and counter-plot. The hero and his friend themselves become the subject of intrigue, and for a time are outlawed from England by the machinations of Marguerite of Navarre, who makes very violent but unsuccessful love to our hero. There is, of course, but little room for character-drawing in such a tale of breathless adventure, yet the Prince of Orange—the Rebel Prince—stands out well, and the story affords a graphic view of the stirring times of that day.

From the same.—'The Terror by Night,' by James Maclaren Cobban. The incidents connected with this vivid and tragic story will find favour with most readers who are familiar with the fictional writings of R. L. Stevenson and Dr. Conan Doyle. The mysterious interests involved centre round Beckford Priory, its hostess, Celia Henslow, the only child and heir of William Henslow, deceased, and her cousin and companion, Cynthia Brooke. Dr. Montague Smith and his friend and confidant, Mr. Maudslay, who are on a visit to the mansion, are during their stay made sharers in the mystery. This is no less than the repeated appearance of a gruesome visitant wearing a wire mask, and the terror inspired thereby results in a dangerous fall and the consequent serious illness of Celia. Immediately upon this alarming event, Albert Henslow, her uncle, is summoned, whose subsequent duplicity and gross behaviour towards his niece and her loving, considerate, and helpful nurse Cynthia evoke much antagonism and suspicion. The story then develops rapidly, for it is through the tragic death of the nephew of Billiter, the family solicitor, the solving of the Priory mystery is finally accomplished. A Mr. Townshend, much celebrated for his exploits as an amateur detective, with the efficient aid of Maudslay, are, after many adventurous attempts, successful in meting out 'summary justice' to the veritable 'Terror by Night.' How this is achieved we leave to the reader, who will find the novel of absorbing interest.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'The Household of Peter,' by Rosa Nouchette Carey. Miss Carey's novels are always marked by much interest, though it may be of a quiet, domesticated order. Occasionally, too, there are gleams of humour which show that the author, though apparently old-fashioned, has a shrewd perception of the social follies of the present generation. The household of Peter is of a pre-eminently respectable type, but yet in its offshoots it possesses no slight amount of interest. Miss Carey has the gift of writing simply and with unaffected pathos, and her refinement of style and delicacy of thought will carry conviction where a novel of far more pretentious effort would fail.

From Messrs. A. R. Mowbray & Co., Ltd.—'Bishop Wilberforce,' by Reginald G. Wilberforce. This is a volume in the series of biographies, 'Leaders of the Church, 1800–1900,' under the general editorship of George W. E. Russell. 'Ecclesiastical biography is apt to lose in attractiveness and interest by reason of the technical and professional spirit in which it is generally handled,' says the Editor in the Preface, and these biographies, therefore, are exclusively by laymen. This volume is very attractively written, and gives a most pleasing picture of the Bishop who was perhaps the most popular figure in the Church during the past century. His life has become such common property, as it were, and he has, rightly or wrongly, been made the hero of so many good stories, that the work of selection in a short history as this is necessitated considerable restraint and care. The author has performed his task with eminent success, and we have not only an excellent biography, but also a clear and concise history of the Church in the Bishop's time. The book is to be thoroughly recommended.

From the same.—'Dean Church,' by D. C. Lathbury. This is another volume in the same series, and is equally good. It is of especial interest on account of Dean Church's close connection with the Oxford Movement. Indeed, a great portion of the volume is occupied with the consideration of that movement, and the influence it had upon the Church of England. Dean Church, in one sense, was not a prominent figure, he was the man behind, the intimate friend of those who fought in the midst of the battle, and perhaps it will never be known how great his influence with such men as Newman and Ward really was. He was a retiring man, and took a foremost part with reluctance; but he did a great work in the Church, and this fact is admirably brought out in this volume. The publishers are to be congratulated on this series, which should go far to familiarise the general public with what the Church has accomplished since 1800.

From Mr. David Nutt.—'The Swedish-Norwegian Union Crisis,' by K. Nordlund; and 'Sweden for Peace,' by Nils Edén. These two pamphlets are published at an opportune time. They are, perhaps, biased, and somewhat one-sided, but they give, at least, a very clear history of the Union and the causes which have led to the present rupture. A large number of people probably know very little about the political conditions in the two countries, and have taken small interest in the present crisis; but the fact remains that the danger signal has been raised, and a very little thing might embroil the nations of Europe in war. It is not for us to express an opinion in favour or against either country, but it must not to be forgotten that the differences between them are very real, and that we ought to take some trouble to understand the situation. We therefore recommend these two pamphlets to the reader's attention.

From Messrs. G. Routledge & Sons.—'The Voice of the Mountains,' edited by Ernest E. Baker and Francis E. Ross. It was indeed a happy inspiration on the part of the compilers of this choice anthology to fix upon such a theme, for glowing tributes have at all times been paid both by poet and prose writer upon every aspect of mountain scenery. Among the many authors from whose works excerpts have been taken are Lord Byron, W. Wordsworth, S. T. Coleridge, Alfred Lord Tennyson, James Thomson, Sir Walter Scott, H. W. Longfellow, Matthew Arnold, R. Browning, J. A. Symonds, and A. C. Swinburne. The book is truly a multum in parvo of 'thoughts that breathe and words that burn,' and it is appropriately and tastefully produced.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—'Tekel,' by Frank J. Adkins, M.A. Mr. Adkins has done himself a disservice in selecting 'Tekel' for the title of his volume; it describes neither the nature nor the scope of his subject, and the man in the street will most probably assume that it includes a few weak sermons not worth reading. Such a conclusion would be very wide of the mark, for the essays Mr. Adkins has written are singularly able and interesting. For some years he has been occupied with the details of actual school work, and his book is the natural outcome of his experiences. His examination of various educational problems of the day is both acute and painstaking, and his criticisms are constructive as well as destructive. The first chapter, 'Strengthening the Foundation,' is perhaps the ablest and soundest, but the general reader will take most interest in the essays entitled 'The Moral Side of School Work,' and 'Some Social Possibilities of the School.' The Appendices are most instructive.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Captain Sheen: a Romance of New Zealand History,' by Charles Owen. This story of the exploits of an old sea-desperado in the early days of the last century is told by one Caspar Mirrimy, son of a gallant officer who fell on the field of Waterloo. The narrator, with an 'adventurous appetite,' is induced to quit his native village to form one in an enterprise planned by Daniel Sheen to discover and seize the treasure hidden in a buccaneering vessel of the seventeenth century lying stranded on the outlying coast of New Zealand. The captain, by means of money artfully obtained from an old mate and associate, Martin Coulished, living at Bristol, subsequently buys and fits out a clipper ship, and the three companions set sail from that port upon their quest. After an adventurous voyage they arrive at Kapiti, but soon find they are treacherously left by the remainder of the crew, who depart with their ship. With much difficulty and apparent risk, Sheen forthwith barters successfully with the Maori chiefs to provide a canoe and guides to help them in reaching their destination. The description of the tramp of the three treasure seekers, with their native companions, to the lonely wreck, the secret seizure of the hidden jewels and money, and the wanderers' long and trying journey back to Kapiti, with the accompanying tragical death of Coulished, form chapters of graphic narration that enthral the reader. The romance is brought to a close by the opportune arrival of Captain Stewart, a South Sea trader, in his brig Elizabeth, and the thrilling episode of a Maori race feud, in which Sheen and he take an ignoble part. Retributive justice, however, overtakes Dan Sheen, while Caspar profitably uses his 'strangely won fortune,' and becomes a pioneer of future colonisation. It is truly a novel of the good old-fashioned school, and will be appreciated by old as well as young readers.

NEW EDITIONS.—A religious book that reaches a fourth edition is presumably well worth reading, and one has only to peruse a few pages of 'The Crown of Science,' by A. Morris Stewart, M.A., to perceive that the success of the book is more than justified. The publisher is Mr. Andrew Melrose, and the book may now be had at 3*s*. 6*d*. net in a strong and choice binding, and at sixpence in paper covers.

ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY.

MY LIFE: A RECORD OF EVENTS AND OPINIONS. By ALFRED RUSSEL WALLACE, Author of 'Man's Place in the Universe,' 'Darwinism,' 'Geographical Distribution of Animals,' 'Natural Selection and Tropical Nature,' 'The Malay Archipelago.' With numerous Portraits, Illustrations, Facsimile Letters, &c. Two vols. Demy 8vo. 25s. net.

It is anticipated that this work will be one of the most important publications of the autumn season. Besides giving full and extremely interesting details of the great scientist's early life and education, his first inclination and attraction towards science, and an anecdotal narrative of his travels on the Amazon and in the Malay Archipelago, it relates the historic incidents connected with his association with Darwin, gives full accounts of all the people he met, and a very particular history of his investigation of Spiritualism and the various controversies evolved from his theories. The book is written in a fascinatingly open and candid style, and is sure to be widely read.

THE LATEST TRIUMPH OF SCIENCE.

THE ORIGIN OF LIFE: its Physical Basis and Definition. By J. BUTLER BURKE. With Photographs, Diagrams, &c. Demy 8vo. 16s. net.

While experimenting at the Cavendish Laboratory, Cambridge, to determine the effect of radium on sterilised bouillon, Mr. Burke recently found that he could secure the apparently spontaneous generation of growths, resembling bacteria, but which were neither bacteria nor crystals. Mr. Burke has put the results of his investigations and discovery into a book, and there is little doubt that it will be eagerly looked forward to by the whole of the scientific world, and its importance cannot be easily estimated.

FORTY YEARS OF A DIPLOMAT'S LIFE.

Sir Frederick St. John's reminiscences cover the wide range of forty years in the public service throughout Europe, Central and South America—the Near and Far East, as well as in the Far West. Sir Frederick's many diplomatic posts include—Attaché at Florence and at Stuttgart; Secretary at Peking, Constantinople, and Vienna; Secretary of Legation at Buenos Ayres and Rio Janeiro; Secretary of Embassy at Constantinople; Minister Resident in Central America, Colombia, and Venezuela; and Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at Belgrade and at Berne.

AN EDITION DE LUXE, WITH COLOURED PLATES, OF

It may be justly said that Madame Duclaux's book on rural France has become a classic. Its interest and value was in no way ephemeral, for in it Madame Duclaux gives the sense of that wonderful world of out-of-doors which seems fading from the horizon of the modern town-dweller. It is a book eminently suited for illustration, and Mr. MacDougall spent a long period in the districts dealt with in the volume in making a series of artistic paintings which are reproduced by the best colour process. Unlike many such books, the paintings were done to illustrate the text, and not the text written to the pictures.

A FASCINATING HISTORICAL MONOGRAPH.

A CHARMING AND STANDARD BOOK ON LACE.

THE LACE BOOK. By N. HUDSON MOORE, Author of 'The Old China Book,' 'The Old Furniture Book,' &c. With 70 Engravings, showing specimens of Lace, or its wear in famous Portraits, with Border, by C. E. CARTWRIGHT, and Decorations after BODONI. 4to. 21s. net.

This is a handsomely illustrated history of lace from the earliest times. It is divided into five parts, dealing respectively with the Growth of Lace, Italian Lace, French and Spanish Laces, and English and Irish Lace. In the introductory part the author traces the whole history of lace manufacture in all countries in an exhaustive manner, and gives full details of the different styles of lace of the various periods.

FIGHTING FOR THE 'ASHES.'

AN AUSTRALIAN CRICKETER ON TOUR. Reminiscences, Impressions, and Experiences of Two Trips. With Records of Matches and Views on English Cricket. By FRANK LAVER. With nearly 100 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author. Crown 8vo. 6s.

Mr. Laver's book is not a mere record of the cricket matches in which the Australian cricketers took part. It is for the most part a record of what a traveller sees and hears, and deals largely with the social aspect of the tenth and twelfth teams whilst in England, New Zealand, and America, and during their journey to the Mother Country and back. The book, therefore, not only appeals to the cricket enthusiast, but to that large section of the public whose interest in cricket is less ardent.

THE MONTEZUMA EDITION

OF THE WORKS OF

William Hickling Prescott

TO BE COMPLETED IN

22 Vols. 8vo. Price £13. 15s. net.

Of this edition, 12 vols. are already published, and the remaining 10 will follow with the least possible delay. The paper, printing, and illustrations are of the highest possible excellence, and no expense has been spared to make the book a veritable triumph of book-making. As there are only 100 copies for sale in England, early application is necessary.

This edition not only contains the notes of the late John Foster Kirk, who was Prescott's secretary, and revised the later editions of his Works, but it has also been re-edited by Dr. Wilfred H. Munro, who has devoted himself for years to the study of the Reformation period—the era most closely connected with the subjects of Prescott's Works. He has embodied in his notes the additional light which the historical research of the last half-century has shed on the events treated of by Prescott.

The illustrations are 110 in number, and are full-page photogravures engraved and printed in Paris by the Goupil process in monochrome. They are on India paper.

READY AT ONCE

THE OCTOBER

NUMBER OF

THE BOOK MONTHLY

AN ILLVSTRATED RECORD, GVIDE AND MAGAZINE
FOR BOOKSELLERS, LIBRARIANS & PVBLISHERS
FOR BOOKBVYERS, READERS & WRITERS

October is the heaviest month in the year for a publication like the BOOK MONTHLY—heavy alike for advertisements and for announcements of the new books—and so it has not been possible to get the number ready exactly on the 1st. But it will be little late, and it will be worth having, especially as it only costs sixpence net, and for that is beautifully illustrated and printed.

It contains an exceptionally interesting article in which Mr. Percy Fitzgerald, one of the few surviving friends of Charles Dickens, gives his reminiscences of the Literary Fifties in London. Another article by a well-known writer asks the question, Is it possible to write a great work on London? A third article is in the form of an inquiry concerning the book-borrower's little ways.

Of course the October number has all the permanent features which have made the BOOK MONTHLY so useful and acceptable to booksellers, librarians, book buyers, and readers. Its catalogue of the books published in September is not only carefully done, and very full, but it is clearly printed, and so can be read with pleasure.

With October the BOOK MONTHLY begins its third annual volume, so this is a good time to commence subscribing to it. The Publishers are SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., Stationers' Hall Court, London, who on application will send a specimen copy.

Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners.

By JOHN BUNYAN. With Fifteen Illustrations by HAROLD COPPING. Edition de Luxe, limited to 150 numbered copies. Large foolscap 4to. Vellum, gilt top. 25s. net.

'If the outward form of a book should correspond to the wealth of its contents, then it was altogether fitting that GRACE ABOUNDING should be brought out in such a beautiful edition as this. Those who are observant of such matters know that for some years past the books issuing in the ordinary way from The Religious Tract Society's press have been distinguished by a fineness of letter and a care for typographical detail that make them always a pleasure to see. These qualities in the volume before us are carried to the highest degree. Exquisitely printed on hand-made paper with broad margins, the book mightily woos readers by its mere appearance. Mr. Harold Copping, who illustrated a corresponding edition of the "Pilgrim's Progress," supplies fifteen drawings, in which he portrays with charming sympathy and artistic skill the chief events in Bunyan's life recorded in the book. The drawings are reproduced in bromide photographs that are marvels of technical perfection. The volume is beautifully bound in white vellum, with gilt lettering and gilt top. Taken altogether, it is one of the handsomest books we have seen for many a long day.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.

THE FLORENCE OF LANDOR.

By LILIAN WHITING,

Author of 'The World Beautiful,' 'A Study of Elizabeth Barrett Browning,' 'The Outlook Beautiful,' 'Spiritual Significance,' &c., &c.

In 'The Florence of Landor' Lilian Whiting has made a rather new departure—not only from her own previous lines of work, but in the entire range of general literature this book is somewhat unique in conception—its aim being to suggest the living drama that was set in the scenic enchantment of Florence during the period of Walter Savage Landor's life in that 'Flower of all Cities and City of all Flowers'—1821 to 1864—during which time groups of the most brilliant people of the nineteenth century came and went, or—as in the case of the Brownings and the Trollopes—came and stayed.

Illustrated by ALICE BARBER STEPHENS.

ON THE RED STAIRCASE.

Scotsman.—'A remarkable tale of the sea of intrigues and tumult which surrounded in Moscow the boyhood of Peter the Great. . . . It is both valuable and intensely interesting because of the side light which it throws upon Russian Society at the time.'

AN IMPERIAL LOVER.

Spectator.—'The novel not only shows careful and intelligent study of the period, but it is skilfully constructed, well written, and thoroughly interesting.'

THE HOUSE OF THE WIZARD.

Spectator.—'A clever picture of the time of Henry VIII. . . . a novel which has the added attraction—not always to be met with in historical romances—of an engrossing love interest.'

A YANKEE VOLUNTEER.

KITTY AND THE VISCOUNT

By MULVY OUSELEY.

The author is well-known in journalism, but this is his first novel. It is a cleverly written and exciting story that grips the attention of the reader and holds it from the start. We anticipate a big call for the book, not only because it strongly appeals to the usual class of fiction reader on account of its breathless excitement coupled with a powerful love element, but because it is, we may safely assume, also destined to enlist the hearing of everyone interested in work and wages.

Messrs. JACK'S AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS

THE MAKERS OF CANADA.

'The History of a Nation is the Lives of its Great Men.'

EDITORS: Duncan Campbell Scott, F.R.S.C.; Pelham Edgar, Ph.D.
ADVISORY BOARD: B. E. Walker, D.C.L.; James Bain, D.C.L.; Alfred D. De Celles, Litt.D., F.R.S.C.; Nathaniel Burwash, S.T.D., F.R.S.C.

In presenting to the public 'THE MAKERS OF CANADA' Series, the publishers wish to emphasise the fact that the work is intended to set forth the strenuous characters of Canadian history who assisted in developing what we now recognise as the essential spirit of the young Canadian nation. It is history written in a wealth of personal detail.

The Series (complete in 20 volumes) has come into being to supply the need felt for a work dealing exhaustively with Canadian affairs from the standpoint of personal effort. It is, in fact, the outcome of demands made by the people of Canada and those interested in Canadian development.

LIMITED EDITION. Only 400 sets are being printed. Of these 280 are for sale in Canada only, and have been nearly all subscribed for. The remaining 120 sets are now secured for the United Kingdom. These will be numbered and signed. TERMS OF PUBLICATION are 21*s.* per volume net, and subscriptions are received only for the complete set of twenty volumes.

The volumes on 'Sir Frederick Haldimand,' by Miss McIlwraith, and 'Samuel de Champlain,' by N. E. Dionne, LL.D., and 'Lord Elgin,' by the late Sir J. G. Bourinot, K.C.M.G., are now ready, and the succeeding volumes will follow at short intervals.

JAPAN AND CHINA: their History, Arts,

Sciences, Manners, Customs, Laws, Religions, and Literature. By Captain F. BRINKLEY, for many years Special Correspondent of the TIMES at Tokyo. Only 500 copies have been provided for the United Kingdom and 35 Edition de Luxe. Illustrated with 226 Full-page Plates, 100 of which are printed in Colours. In 12 vols., cloth, with Design in Gold and gilt top, price £8 8*s.* net. Only Complete Sets sold. (Nearly out of print.)

'The most beautiful, fascinating, and authoritative work on that country, and its vast, unwieldy neighbour of China, which has yet been written in English. Its production has evidently been a labour of love. . . . Captain Brinkley's sumptuous and delightful work would be an adornment to any library, and is simply indispensable to all who would know the truth about Japan.'—SPECTATOR.

HOW CANADA WAS HELD FOR THE EMPIRE:

The Story of the War between England and the United States in 1812. By DAVID HANNAY, D.C.L. Profusely illustrated. 1 vol. large 8vo. 7*s.* 6*d.* net.

'A noteworthy contribution to the literature of a chapter of Colonial history which the home historians are rather apt to ignore.'—SCOTSMAN.

GRANT and FREDERICK HAMILTON. 1 vol. large 8vo. buckram, with Photogravure Frontispiece, 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

GRANT was a strong man, a born leader and ruler of men, and a tireless worker. He began life as a country lad, and an early accident directed his mind to the work of the ministry. He was a leader among his boyhood friends as a student in Glasgow, as a minister, as university principal at Queen's University, Toronto. From the time of the Canadian Confederation it would be hard to find any great movement in Canadian church or State, in which his influence was not a recognised force. As Scotsman and as Canadian he is a man of whom the Empire has just cause to be proud.

HOLINSHED'S CHRONICLES OF ENGLAND, SCOTLAND, AND IRELAND.

Edited, and with Introduction, by CHARLES WHIBLEY.

There are no chronicles of the sixteenth century which had a deeper influence upon English Literature than those which bear the name of Raphael Holinshed. 'Macbeth,' 'King Lear,' and the most of the historical plays derive their plot direct from Holinshed, whose Chronicles, even if they had not possessed conspicuous merits of their own, would for this reason alone have been secure of immortality. To whichever page of the book we turn, we shall find the splendid prose which was the glory of Tudor England, and the brave and simple outlook upon life which distinquished the contemporaries of Shakespeare.

Our reprint will be made from the first edition, which is the only edition published in Holinshed's lifetime, and which derives an added interest from the fact that Shakespeare used it. The cancelled pages will be restored to their place in the text.

In 15 volumes, 4to. buckram gilt, gilt top, at 21*s.* net the volume, limited to 350 numbered copies for sale in the United Kingdom. Subscribers' names now being received.

A New Series. The First Two Volumes Now Ready.

THE LIVES OF THE KINGS.

'THE LIVES OF THE KINGS,' composed when the Tudors and early Stuarts were upon the throne, have fallen into a forgetfulness which they do not deserve. Of their value and interest there can be no doubt. It is proprosed to reprint the best of them, under the editorship of Mr. CHARLES WHIBLEY, and in such a form that they will be recognised by collectors as distinguished examples of the printer's art. The first number will be taken from his great work, 'The Union of the Noble and Illustre Famelies of Lancastre and York.' First published in 1542, the book was completed by Grafton in 1550, but as its destruction was ordered by Queen Mary in 1555, it is to-day excessively rare, and we are told that no complete copy of the first edition is in existence.

EDWARD HALL'S CHRONICLE OF HENRY VIII.

'We congratulate Messrs. Jack on their new enterprise of publishing, in a handsome modern form, the Old Chronicles of the Kings of England. The series is certain to be popular, especially if the introductions to future volumes are as good, informing, and large-minded as Mr. Whibley's introduction to "The Triumphant Reigne of Kyng Henry the VIII."'—SPECTATOR.

The Publishers' Circular

OUR ANNOUNCEMENT NUMBER AND A NOTE ON THE P.C. GENERALLY.

It is very satisfactory to find our columns filled with announcements of new works and new editions, as it proves that publishers are looking with confidence into the near future. It is questionable whether we have ever had a larger number of new books to announce—and some lists were received too late for use this week—and of the importance and interest of a great many of them there can be little question.

It will be seen that, in addition to the long lists in the text, many of the publishers have also taken more or less space in our advertisement pages; but, unfortunately, many publishers who constantly send us announcements and notes for free insertion never, or rarely ever, pay for an advertisement.

It is obvious that those who send us free matter set some value on the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record, or they would not trouble to do so; it is equally obvious that the P.C. could not be produced on these free notices, and we take this opportunity, when at great expense we are giving so much space to the announcements of our publishers, to ask those who do not support the paper, or perhaps give a list once or twice a year, to consider whether it would not be in their own interests to advertise regularly, as many of the largest houses do.

It surprised us a good deal not long ago to hear a publisher who has known the P.C. nearly half a century say that he had always had an idea that our circulation was only about five hundred copies a week, whereas it is nearly five thousand and shows a steady annual increase.

Other publishers seem to have an idea that advertisements in the leading book-trade organ in the English language are not appreciated by the booksellers. To test this point we sent to a large number of our subscribers at home and in the Colonies a letter asking them if they found the publishers' advertisements in the P.C. useful to them. We received hundreds of replies from the best booksellers dealing in English books at home and abroad, and we think we can without exaggeration say that stronger evidence of appreciation of advertisements in a trade organ could not be desired. We shall be delighted to let any publisher who doubts the interest taken by booksellers in their trade paper see these testimonials.

We are also glad to say that after long and inevitable delays the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record, with other properties connected with it—viz. the annual and other volumes of the English Catalogue of Books—will in a week or so be taken over by a limited company, consisting chiefly of publishers and booksellers, including Messrs. Longmans and Mr. Murray, Mr. A. H. Hallam Murray and Mr. Hubert Longman being directors with Mr. E. and Mr. R. B. Marston.

Although it is not proposed that there should be any change in size or price at present, there is no doubt the future directors have in view some improvements in the paper, and any suggestions to this effect which our readers can give us will be welcome.

We are glad to have had promise of increased support from several publishers, and can assure them in return that no trouble or expense will be spared which will increase the utility of the paper both to the publisher and to the bookseller and to librarians—quite a large number of leading librarians are subscribers.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. J. A. Steuart's new work, which will be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, is a romance entitled 'The Red Reaper, a Tale of the Montrose.' Mr. Steuart has chosen a splendid theme, and has from boyhood been familiar with the scenes of the story.

Most of the important works of modern British artists are in private ownership, and the public has but few opportunities of seeing them. By the aid of the three-colour process, Messrs. Cassell have been producing during the past year a collection of 'Great Pictures in Private Galleries.' The series is now complete, and the second and concluding volume is about to be published. All the great names in recent British art are here represented—Leighton, Millais, Rossetti, Burne-Jones, Fred Walker, and many others who have joined the company of the 'Old Masters'; while among those still living and working are Holman Hunt, David Murray, R.A., Peter Graham, R.A., Alfred East, A.R.A., Edward Stott, Frank Dicksee, R.A., Miss Brickdale, and a score of others who are sustaining the reputation of the contemporary art of our country.

Messrs. Black are issuing new cheap illustrated editions of the late Archdeacon Farrar's school tales—'Eric,' 'Julian Home,' and 'St. Winifred's.' It is interesting to recall what the Archdeacon wrote of them more than a generation after they were first published: 'The fact that, with all their many imperfections, these youthful writings still live—that I have been thanked for them by many, who have written to me from every quarter in which the English language is spoken—that I still am thanked for them, both by boys and by the parents of boys, who tell me of the good which they gained from them in their earlier years: these facts make me gratefully hopeful that these little efforts of my earlier days were not wholly in vain. I trust that these books will continue to live so long as they prove to be useful. If ever they should cease to be so, I shall be the first to desire that they should fall into oblivion.'

Under the title 'Twenty Years in Paris,' Robert Sherard has written a volume of reminiscences of a literary life in Paris, which Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish during the autumn season.

Messrs. Ellis of 29 New Bond Street, London, W., announce as nearly ready 'The Bibliography of Dante Gabriel Rossetti,' by W. M. Rossetti (only 250 copies, printed at the Chiswick Press).

Calcutta: Past and Present, by Kathleen Blechynden, with illustrations from portraits and engravings, and a coloured frontispiece, will be published by Messrs. W. Thacker & Co., Creed Lane, in October.

'A Sword of the Old Frontier' is the title of a tale of Fort Chartres and Detroit which is amplified in a sub-title as 'A plain account of Sundry Adventures befalling Chevalier Raoul de Coubert, one time Captain in the Hussars of Languedoc, during the year 1763.' Mr. Randall Parrish's gift for telling an exciting story of the kind which the great majority of people like to read has been demonstrated in two earlier books which have had aggregate English and American sales of tens of thousands of copies. The publishers here will be, as before, Messrs. Putnam.

The Brooklyn Daily Eagle says of E. F. Benson's 'Image in the Sand' that it 'is a love romance, but it is in part love of a very weird sort. Spiritualism, hypnotism, demoniac possession, white and black magic, oriental theosophy—all are found among the component parts of this tale.' The Pittsburgh Gazette considers it 'well-nigh flawless.'

A new volume by the Hon. A. S. G. Canning, author of 'Shakespeare Studied in Eight Plays' and other works, was published by Mr. Unwin on the 18th inst. It bears the suggestive title of 'History in Scott's Novels,' and its object is at once to throw light on the novels by a study of the periods which they embrace and to show how Scott's treatment vivifies the historical facts which he touches.

Mr. F. Carrel has written, and will publish early in October, through Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co., a treatise entitled 'An Analysis of Human Motive.'

Harrison & Sons, of 45 Pall Mall, are preparing and will publish during the ensuing season the following: 'Burke's Landed Gentry of Great Britain, a Genealogical and Heraldic History,' by Sir Bernard Burke, C.B., edited by Ashworth P. Burke, 11th edition; 'Burke's Peerage and Baronetage, the Privy Council, Knightage, and Companionage,' edited by A. P. Burke, 68th edition, for 1906; 'Our Empire Past and Present,' by the Earl of Meath, M. H. Cornwall Legh, L.L.A., and Edith Jackson, with portrait, illustration, and maps, Vol. 2, Great Britain in Asia, crown 8vo. 7*s.* 6*d.*; 'The Love Letters of a Genius,' being a translation by E. A. S. Watt of Prosper Mérimée 'Lettres à une Income,' with an Introduction by F. E. Duff, one vol. demy 4to. 7*s.* 6*d.* net; 'The Winning Rules of Roulette Practically Considered,' by Sperinza, one vol. crown 8vo. 3*s.* 6*d.* net.

'The Country Press' is the designation of a new publishing undertaking which has just been established at 17 and 19 Ball Street, Kensington, W., with the especial object of publishing volumes at a moderate and, as far as possible, at a uniform price, on all matters (so deeply interesting, especially to those in cities pent) relating to the country and to country pursuits. Its first publication, nearly ready, will be a re-issue of Mr. Francis George Heath's volume, 'The Fern Paradise,' which, as 'a plea for the culture of ferns,' was first published in an expensive form thirty years ago, and secured a popularity and sale that were extended to every part of the English-speaking world. The appreciable effect the book has had in extending the popular love of ferns will probably secure for it a welcome in the new and less expensive form of an 'Author's Edition.'

Messrs. Henry Young & Sons, of Liverpool, are preparing for publication a work written by Mr. John Hughes, of this city, entitled 'Liverpool Banks and Bankers, 1760-1837, a history of the circumstances which gave rise to the industry, and of the man who founded and developed it.'

The work traces the history of banking in Liverpool from the earliest recorded banker, John Wyke, watchmaker and banker, 1770, to the time when joint-stock banks almost universally supplanted the private banker. In the course of the history full particulars are given of the well-known early Liverpool bankers—William Clarke, William Roscoe, Arthur Heywood, Thomas Leyland, John Moss, Samuel Hope, Thomas Staniforth, Sir Michael Cromie, and many other members of the fraternity, either partners with them or contemporary with them.

The work also contains an account of Liverpool and its commerce; the assistance given by the Liverpool Corporation in times of financial crisis; the system of business practised by the early bankers, their dress, hours of work, &c.

Mr. Werner Laurie is about to issue 'How to Live the Simple Life,' by Calvin Pater. Mr. Pater 'has crystallised all the wisdom of the ancient and modern writers on the subject into a practical guide, which ought to be indispensable to all seekers after the simple life. Some of the chapter headings are as follows: The New Crusade, The Simple-Selfish Life, The Wisdom of Wagner, The Stomach, The Soul, The Mind, The Body, Manners and Maxims.'

Mr. Mackenzie Bell, who has been making a long stay in Madeira, continues his 'Pictures of Spain' in the Baptist Times, where these poems will appear occasionally during the present year. The next of the series is descriptive of life in the country.

Dr. Horton's guide to devotion, 'The Open Secret,' which he was led to write during the temporary suspension of his eyesight last year, is to be issued in shilling cheap edition. The National Free Church Council announces it for October 11.

'The Art and Craft of the Author' is the title of a new handbook on literary work by Mr. C. E. Heisch, which is to be published during this autumn by Mr. Elliot Stock. Its purpose will be to explain the principles which should guide the author, the objects he should keep in view, and the methods of carrying these out, rather than to supply a guide to the technicalities of the author's work.

The new and enlarged edition of Sacred Songs and Solos by Ira D. Sankey, published by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, containing 1,200 pieces, is bound to become a popular hymn-book, as all its predecessors have. There is still a large demand for the volume containing 1,169 pieces, consisting of the well-known collection of 750 hymns bound together with 'New Hymns and Solos' and 'The Christian Choir'; but this enlarged volume, containing the cream of those books and many new selections numbered consecutively will prove much more convenient for Gospel meetings. The presentation edition ought to command a good sale during the coming season.

'A Nine Days' Wonder,' by Mrs. B. M. Croker, is an Irish story (for the most part) relating the extraordinary experience of a girl of the peasant class who turns out to be the only child of an English nobleman. The discovery is not made till she is one and twenty, and she has by then acquired the religion, ideas, and manners of the race to which she did not belong. Messrs. Methuen have just issued the book.

A novel by a new writer, E. M. Devenish, will be published by Messrs. Duckworth immediately. Welsh superstition, 'Revivalist' preaching, scenes in a nunnery, an American boarding-house, and vivid sketches of the neighbourhood known as 'The Bowery,' occur in the book, which tells of a wandering in search of one beloved, and is entitled 'The Wandering of Joyce.'

'Howard Letters and Memories' contains more than one hundred letters addressed to the author, Mr. William Tallack, formerly Secretary of the Howard Association for thirty-five years. The book also embodies reminiscences of the author's colleagues, and includes many anecdotes and notices of conversations with well-known persons. To all who are interested in questions of prison and social reform the book will no doubt be welcome. The book bears the imprint of Messrs. Methuen & Co.

Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., Ltd., will publish in October a new volume by Lady Lindsay entitled 'Godfrey's Quest, a Fantastic Poem.' Lady Lindsay has already published eight volumes of poems, but 'Godfrey's Quest' appears to be the most important, except, perhaps, 'The Apostle of the Ardennes.' The new volume is, however, not framed on a religious or biographical subject; it is wholly imaginative, and the scenes are laid in the Land of Nowhere.

The reputation which connects Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co., of Chicago, with the production of beautifully made books promises to be augmented this season by the publication of Mrs. McMahan's 'Shelley in Italy,' a companion volume to her successful 'Florence in the Poetry of the Brownings' of last year, and a charming book entitled 'A Garden in Pink,' which tells the story of a garden in a most refreshing and personal way, and which has naturally suggested a novel and effective scheme of decoration and illustration. The 'Shelley' will be most profusely illustrated from photographs, and is likely to prove acceptable as a guide book as well as for presentation purposes.

Under the title of 'Northern Trails, Some Studies of Animal Life in the Far North,' Messrs. Ginn & Co. will shortly publish a new book by William J. Long. The volume will be illustrated by Charles Copeland, and will be uniform with the author's 'Beasts of the Field,' 'Fowls of the Air,' 'School of the Woods,' and 'A Little Brother to the Bear.' No book from Dr. Long's pen has appeared since the autumn of 1903, and this fresh collection of wilderness studies should be welcomed as embodying the author's further views on animal psychology.

Messrs. J. Baker & Son, publishers, Clifton, will shortly issue 'An Historical Romance dealing with Greek History' by Charles Hamilton Bromby, late of Oxford and the Middle Temple.

Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., are issuing cheap editions this autumn of Dean Plumptre's 'Spirits in Prison,' Dr. Horton's 'The Teaching of Jesus' and 'The Commandments of Jesus,' and Professor Stalker's 'The Two St. Johns of the New Testament,' books which in their more expensive form have already had very large sales.

Messrs. Meehan, of Bath, announce the early publication of 'More Famous Houses of Bath and District,' with an Introduction by Egerton Castle, author of 'The Bath Comedy.' It will form a continuation of 'The Famous Houses of Bath and District,' published so successfully in 1901. It will be in every respect equally well produced as the first volume, to which it will be a necessary companion. The work is the result of many years of labour and investigation on the part of Mr. J. F. Meehan, who has spared neither time or expense in collecting material for what is confidently expected to be a most important publication of local reference and general interest. Though the first series is now out of print and selling at more than double its original subscription price, the second series will be issued at the same price as the first (10*s.* 6*d.* net), and only the same number of copies will be printed (500). It will be fully illustrated.

Messrs. A. & C. Black will publish 'The Adventures of Punch,' a new book by Ascot R. Hope, with illustrations in colour by Stephen Bagot De La Bere.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers have added to their list of Electrical Handbooks a volume entitled 'Practical Electric Wiring for Lighting Installations,' by C. C. Metcalfe, A.M.I.E.E., of the Manchester School of Technology. The book is written for foremen, wiremen, and students, and for those who wish to acquire a practical knowledge of wiring, jointing, and fitting for the installation of electric light. The book is fully illustrated.

The third impression of Mr. Lionel Portman's successful story of public school life, making the sixth thousand, has been published by Mr. Alston Rivers.

Doubtless many of our readers are asked to give lantern lectures occasionally, and they may be glad to know that by writing to the Lantern Slide Department, London and North-Western Railway, Euston, they can have a list of 400 slides of views to select from.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish shortly a volume of impressions of literary people and others by Laura Hain Friswell, under the title of 'In the Sixties and Seventies.' The writer of this book is the daughter of the late Mr. Hain Friswell, author of 'The Gentle Life' and other well-known books. Mr. Friswell was intimately associated with many of the distinguished literary men of his day, and Miss Friswell's impressions cover a wide field, and comprise, among many others, recollections of Lord Beaconsfield, W. E. Gladstone, Sir William Harcourt, Sir Richard and Lady Burton, Lord Tennyson, Charles Kingsley, William Morris, and William Black.

Mr. Heinemann published on the 29th inst. a new and cheaper edition of Sir Walter Armstrong's work on 'Sir Joshua Reynolds and his Place in English Art.' This edition, uniform with the same author's 'Gainsborough,' has been revised and brought up to date, and the two volumes offer a complete appreciation of English Art at its most brilliant period. The book is fully illustrated.

Mr. T. Sealey Clark, of 34 Craven Street, Strand, announces the forthcoming publication of an important new theatrical annual, to be called 'The Green Book, or Who's Who on the Stage,' which will form a valuable addition to the existing works of reference. 'The Green Book' will be a handsome volume of about 400 pages, and will contain something like 2,500 condensed biographies (compiled from direct personal sources) of the leading members of the dramatic, musical, and variety professions, including managers, agents, proprietors, and musical directors. The editor is Mr. Bampton Hunt, late of 'M.A.P.' The work will be printed on paper specially made by Messrs. Spalding & Hodge, and will be freely illustrated with first-class full-page and other portraits of the leading figures on the English stage.

In Mr. Augustine Birrell's new book which we recently announced will be found an appreciation of Locker Lampson, entitled 'A Connoisseur,' in which some interesting personal details of that eminent collector's life and pursuits will appear. The title of the volume of Essays will be 'In the Name of the Bodleian, and other Essays.'

The Fleming H. Revell Company announce the immediate publication of a new work by Mr. William Eleroy Curtis, entitled 'Modern India.'

In connection with the Nelson Centenary it is of interest to learn that Rear-Admiral S. Eardley-Wilmot has written a short but comprehensive account of the last and greatest phase of Nelson's career. It is entitled 'Nelson's Last Campaign.' The battle of Trafalgar is dealt with in detail, and illustrated with a plan showing the disposition of the rival fleets. A full-page illustration of the 'Victory' in action, by Chev. E. de Martino, adds to the attractiveness of this work, which will be issued in a few days by Mr. Edward Stanford, price 2*s.* 6*d.* net.

Mr. A. Siegle will publish immediately 'A German Cookery Book for the English Kitchen,' by Ella Oswald. This work will contain a representative selection of German recipes translated into English and carefully adapted to the utensils, weights and measures in use in an English kitchen. Until now a German cookery book written in English has not existed.

Messrs. Abel Heywood & Son, of Manchester, have been appointed English agents for the following publications, which have a large sale in America: 'United States Navy Drill,' 'Jiu-Jitsu, the Japanese System of Physical Culture,' by M. Ohashi, of Tokio; 'Professor Attila's 5-lb. Dumb-bell Exercises'; 'Scientific Bag Punching'; 'Boxing,' by James I. Corbett; 'Poker, How to Win, and Official Rules'; and 'Fox's Book for Barbers, with Recipes.'

A new French Grammar, by Monsieur Jacques Coquelin, forms the first volume in a new series which the Walter Scott Publishing Co. have started, having for its object the rational study of modern languages. The idea is to form a sort of educational bridge between two antagonistic systems of studying foreign languages—namely, those depending upon methods of translation and conversation.

One of the latest volumes to be published upon Japan is that entitled 'Japan, from the Old to the New.' The author is Robert Grant Webster, LL.B., J.P., late M.P. for St. Pancras. The volume will be published shortly by Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.

Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd., have added to their Thin Paper Classics a new volume of the novels of Laurence Sterne, which contains 'The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy, Gent.,' and 'A Sentimental Journey through France and Italy.' They have also added to their 'Devotional' series 'Lyra Germanica,' hymns for the Sundays and chief festivals of the Christian year, translated from the German by Catharine Winkworth. These are two charming volumes for the pocket, printed on the usual thin paper and bound in the usual limp leather.

The first number of Gas and Oil Power, a new illustrated monthly review for factory owners and other power users, which has been in preparation for several months, will be issued in October at 19 Ludgate Hill, London, E.C.

'Sir Walter Scott on his Gabions' is the title of an article by the Hon. Mrs. Maxwell Scott, of Abbotsford, in the October Nineteenth Century and After, which is sure to attract general attention.

'Might we Eat Less and Be Better for It?' is the title of an article in the October number of the World's Work and Play. The writer concludes, of course, that we might. Mr. Henry Norman, M.P., discusses the terms of peace in the same magazine, which also tells how Huddersfield saves its babies, and gives us a vision of the threepenny loaf making its appearance in London by Christmas.

A volume entitled 'The Universal Elements of the Christian Religion,' by the Rev. Charles Cuthbert Hall, D.D., LL.D., will shortly be issued by the Fleming H. Revell Company.

Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier have in the press for immediate publication a novel entitled 'St. Cuthbert's of the West,' by Robert E. Knowles. The author is a Canadian.

In spite of the daily and manifold uses to which electricity is put, it is amazing how few people have even a fair understanding of how it works. In 'The Romance of Modern Electricity,' shortly to be issued by Messrs. Seeley & Co., Mr. C. R. Gibson successfully explains in non-technical language how it is applied in practically all the important uses to which it is put. Mr. Gibson has lectured to all classes, from scientific men to working lads, so is keenly alive to the ordinary man's difficulties in understanding what is, after all, an elusive subject.

Mr. Archibald Williams's new volume to be issued by Messrs. Seeley this autumn is 'The Romance of Modern Mechanism.' In it he describes in his well-known lucid style all kinds of mechanism, from scientific instruments such as a measuring machine capable of registering a difference of thickness down to one millionth of an inch, and another that will rule ten parallel lines on the edge of a piece of tissue paper, up to mammoth hammers capable of delivering blows equivalent to the momentum of a falling mass weighing 4,000 tons.

An entirely new (copyright) edition of Dr. George MacDonald's story 'Phantastes, a Faerie Romance for Men and Women,' with thirty-three fresh illustrations by Mr. Arthur Hughes, the author's oldest living friend and first illustrator, will be issued early in October by Mr. Arthur C. Fifield.

Mr. Fifield will also publish in October a new book by F. C. Constable, 'Poverty and Hereditary Genius,' a criticism of Francis Galton's well-known work on 'Hereditary Genius.' Mr. Constable will be remembered as the author of an ingenious novel 'Aunt Juditte's Island,' and of 'The Curse of Intellect,' now in its third edition.

A new book by H. Noel Williams, the author of 'Madame Du Barry' &c. will be published immediately by Messrs. Harper & Brothers. It is entitled 'Queens of the French Stage,' and gives an account of the private lives and professional careers of some celebrities of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The book is illustrated by portraits.

SPENCER AND THE GREAT RIDDLE.

To every aspect of the problem Herbert Spencer must have given thought; but he has plainly declared that the human intellect, as at present constituted, can offer no solution. The greatest mind that this world has yet produced—the mind that systematised all human knowledge, that revolutionised modern science, that dissipated materialism for ever, that revealed to us the ghostly unity of all existence, that re-established all ethics upon an immutable and eternal foundation—the mind that could expound with equal lucidity, and by the same universal formula, the history of a gnat or the history of a sun—confessed itself, before the Riddle of Existence, scarcely less helpless than the mind of a child.—Lafcadio Hearn, in the September Atlantic.

[Although Herbert Spencer was an angler and regretted he had not given more time to the sport, it does not follow that we quite agree with the estimate of him given by the late Lafcadio Hearn, the delightful interpreter of the Japanese mind.—Ed.]

FRENCH NEWS ABOUT THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR!

THE October number of the English Illustrated Magazine, published on the 28th inst., contains extensive extracts from a private journal kept by an officer on H.M.S. Britannia in 1805. The Britannia was in the battle of Trafalgar, and these unique extracts cover the period of the preparation for the great battle, the battle itself, and the few following days. This journal has never before been published, and gives a very vivid picture, by an intelligent eye-witness, of some of the most stirring events in English history.

NEW BOOKS ABOUT THE FAR EAST.

THE interest in Japan and the East shows no sign of dying out, in fact it seems to increase daily, and the publishers endeavour to keep it up by supplying the public with a succession of timely volumes. Among those announced by Messrs. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, especial attention should be directed to 'Far Eastern Impressions,' by Ernest F. G. Hatch, some interesting and pertinent notes by a business man on Japan, Corea, and China; 'Arts and Crafts of Old Japan,' a popular introduction to the study of a branch of Japanese genius which has led the world for centuries; and a new, revised edition of Mr. Clement's 'Handbook of Modern Japan,' one of the best handy reference works ever brought out. This is the fifth edition, and in addition to the thorough revision, the author has added a new chapter on the war, and there are new pictures.

NOVELIST AND PUBLISHER.

CURIOUS DISPUTE.

IN the Vacation Court, yesterday, before Mr. Justice Bray, counsel, on behalf of Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co., the well-known publishers, applied for an interim injunction to restrain Mr. John Long, also a publisher, from publishing a book called 'The Lost Viol,' written by Mr. M. P. Shiel.

Counsel, in opening, said that Mr. Shiel was commissioned by the plaintiffs to write a novel of the length of 80,000 words. 'The Lost Viol' was the result, but a dispute arose as to the actual length of the novel, and the plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to make a reduction of £25 on the original contract price of £200. Upon this Mr. Shiel appeared to have gone to Mr. Long and offered the volume rights of the novel. Mr. Long agreed to take the manuscript, and to pay a sum of £75.

Counsel for Mr. Long said his client had acted in perfectly good faith. Mr. Shiel was not a party to the present action, but he appeared to have sold the copyright twice over.

After some argument counsel agreed to enter into cross-undertakings not to publish the novel in volume form until after the trial of the action, the costs of the motion being reserved.—Globe, September 28, 1905.

IMPORTANT TO EXPORTERS OF MAGAZINES &c. TO AUSTRALIA.

MR. WILLIAM DYMOCK, of Sydney, asks us to publish the following particulars respecting a further development of the duties imposed by Australia on British goods. Is it not time that our Government taxed something Australia sends us, or at least retaliated in some way, or are we to sit still while Australia goes on quietly increasing these duties?

Mr. Dymock says: 'Enclosed I hand you a copy of the latest ukase affecting the book trade, issued by Federal Customs Minister Lyne. After November 1 next duty will be charged on all fixed inserts, such as postcards, leaflets, and advertising matter, in magazines and other periodicals. As this will affect a goodly number of the trade, would you kindly bring it under their notice per medium of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR?'

SPECIAL.

Dear Sir,—For your guidance I send you herein copy of circular just received from the Customs Department respecting 'Post-cards, Leaflets, and other Advertising Matter imported in magazines and other periodicals,' to take effect on and after 1st of November, 1905.—Yours faithfully,

GEORGE WALL (per H. P).

Re Circular 04/174 of 13/4/04 (Sydney Order No. 766) . . . and Guide Supplement No. 43:

On and after 1st November, 1905, duty is to be charged on post-cards, leaflets and other advertising matter imported in magazines and other periodicals, even though gummed, sewn, or otherwise fastened thereto.

The arrangements for convenience of importers as regards assessment of duty on loose enclosures, as authorised by Circular Telegrams (2)[*] of 29/4/04 (04/201 and 205) and Circular 05/223 [†] of 11th April last, are to apply also to the fixed 'insets.'

(Intd.) H. N. P. W., Comptroller-General.

The Collector of Customs, New South Wales.

[*] The two wires of the 29/4/04 read as under:

C. & E. 4 3329.—Ten eight five re circular nought four one seven four. On guarantee from importers to pay duty due on enclosures, magazines may be delivered immediately after examination, which, if you approve, may take place on importer's premises.

29/4/04.

C. & E. 04/3349.—Ten eight five re circular nought four one seven four. Desired to avoid unnecessary inconvenience and annoyance to importers. Sufficient to estimate weight after examination of few magazines.

(Sd.) WOLLASTON,

[†] Sydney Order No. 27.

[Since the above was in print we have received from Mr. W. E. Ball, of Fenchurch Street, who sent us Mr. D.'s letter, a cutting from the Sydney Telegraph of August 22, giving the information that the duty on all insets in magazines in the shape of advertising matter, whether loose or stuck or bound, is now 3*d.* per lb. This means that if a publisher of a magazine puts his own or other publishers' lists of books in they will have to pay the duty—and a most vexatious and ununreasonable duty it is.—ED. P.C.].

DEATH OF MR. J. P. COPLAND.

WE regret to see the announcement of the death of Mr. Copland, which took place at his residence, No. 3 Highgate Avenue, Highgate, in his seventy-third year. Mr. Copland's was one of the most familiar faces to be met with in Paternoster Row and the circuit of London publishers and booksellers. For many years he represented Messrs. A. & C. Black in London and the country, but that was long ago. Latterly—and it may also be said for many years—he has carried on an export agency in Paternoster Row. We think it will be said by all those who knew Mr. Copland that he had won their respect and esteem by his pleasant, quiet, genial, and unobtrusive manner, as well as by his sterling character as an honourable and upright man of business.

SCHOOL LIBRARIES.[*]

IN dealing with the subject of school libraries at a meeting of educationalists, it will be quite unnecessary to advance any arguments in praise of reading. I do not anticipate that any here will attempt to controvert the dicta of the greatest minds on the benefits to be derived from reading. Rather would I sound a note of warning. After all that has been said in praise of books and reading, of the pleasures and profit reading can bring, there is nothing with which you have to deal in the present day that calls for more careful regulation, more vigilant watchfulness. Printing, like all other good things, is not an unmixed blessing; for while bestowing blessings with one hand, it distributes something very like curses with the other. Just think for one moment of the enormous mass of garbage that is daily turned out by the Press—the halfpenny 'funnies' and 'comics,' and the still more objectionable 'stories.' These are the things which fall into the hands of children at the most impressionable period of their lives, and exercise the most lamentable influence on their future character. That is the darker side of the picture, but it is there that the influence and guidance of the teacher is more urgently required. The great argument in favour of school or juvenile libraries is that children shall have access to good books; that by the help of the teacher they shall learn to so enjoy and appreciate the good that they will instinctively reject the bad. It is very desirable if you wish to take full advantage of your opportunities that you should acquire some general knowledge of juvenile literature. I do not mean that you should lay yourselves out to read all the books: life is much too short; but there is a method of skipping through a book which is well known to librarians and, I believe, also to reviewers, by which it is possible to quickly gain an insight of its contents, the author's style and manner of treatment, which will be quite sufficient for your purpose. Beware, I beseech you, of the goody-goody style of books of a generation ago; present-day children won't read them (I very much doubt if children ever did, I didn't). You will probably be impressed with the dearth of good, healthy girls' books; but that need not trouble you, they will read and enjoy the books provided for their brothers.

Thus carelessly strutting, with his hands thrust into the pockets of the said coat, of fan-tail cut, he would call upon the customers of the house with that air of easy indifference and apparent independence which few men of the business world are delighted with, and which, when over strained, excites a feeling of contempt rather than of respect.

After absenting himself for an hour or so, he again made his appearance, spontaneously, and instead of keeping his own counsel—a line of conduct so essentially requisite upon the road—opening his wide mouth and narrow mind to relate the form of his reception with each of his customers, making us all acquainted with his own arrangements and with their peculiarities and complaints.

His conversation, ever light and frivolous, was seasoned with a choice collection of cant phrases (of which the following may be received as specimens) that he at all times indiscriminately used, regardless of place or company. Thus, if any person happened to be giving his opinion upon a subject to which Mr. Coxeye was in no wise a party concerned, he would volunteer an interruption, by exclaiming 'Just so, demme, them's my sentiments'; or, fingering with his right hand the place about where his heart should be, when anything was said in which he coincided, he would observe—'Yes, exactually so, the same here'; and then again, allowing the progression of remarks till the speaker uttered something not harmonising with his own contracted views, he would remark, in an undertone, but sufficiently loud to be heard by all, 'Well, I never! that is a stunner, aint it?' or, speaking of some quandam friend equally outrageous and notorious for his follies, whom he imagines you cannot do otherwise than be acquainted with, recommends him particularly to your notice, as well worthy your acquaintance, because he is a regular 'Phizzer' or, addressing the waitress, in lieu of calling her by her proper or generally accepted Christian name, supposing him to require a small quantity of brandy, he would shout, abruptly, 'Here, you domestic, bring me a juvenile bottom'—the term 'bottom' applying to the measure of spirit usually consumed in grog by each party nightly. Interpreted, the word means a quantity amounting, if of brandy, to one shilling sterling; and, being brought in the bottom of the tumbler or glass unmixed, accompanied by hot or cold water and sugar, is usually denominated 'a bottom'; half the quantity consequently being a small or half bottom; or yet, more vulgarly, he might designate the object of his desire 'a cheek.'

Should a well-dressed woman happen to catch his eye, he immediately imagines her entrapped by his dégagé and showy appearance, and returns delighted that, he 'knows not who, but some handsome and splendacious creature has fallen in love' with him. If so seated at table as to be entrusted with carving the cheese, in lieu of inquiring whether 'sound or decayed' would be most acceptable, he would vary the question, by saying 'Shall I send you figured or plain, subdued or unsubdued, sophisticated or unsophisticated?' The cloth having been drawn, his gaudy box emits its odious scented snuff, the taking of which allows him to display a ring which, if exchanged for a nail scoop to remove the mourning border from his dirty finger ends would add not a little to his own comfort, and relieve the eye of others.

Instances of his folly and impudence might be multiplied ad infinitum; but sufficient has already been said to convey a tolerably correct idea of the creature, whom we will for the present leave, that he may, in his peculiar vocabulary, request some gentleman sitting near to 'agitate, or O'Connellize the bell-pull'; ordering the 'boots,' if senior, 'top boots,' or junior, 'under boots' or 'stockings,' to 'bring his embroidered slippers out of his mahogany wardrobe box, in No. 1 Room,' that he may prepare for bed, and sleep, we trust, for more good sense, or to improve what he already possesses: otherwise, our castigation will not end here, but he will be made to learn, by a nearer approach to his identity, 'what he must do, and what he must abstain from doing,' in order that he may render himself 'more respected and respectable.'

OBJECTION TO THE DIVISION OF DINNER SHARES.

A scene of too frequent occurrence presented itself ofter the removal of the dinner cloth to-day. Two strangers, evidently non-commercial, sat down to dine with us, drinking during dinner a few glasses of wine, and ordering for themselves bottled porter and brandy. This was unhesitatingly assented to by the president. They were about to retire abruptly, before the dinner bill was called, without intending to pay their fair division, but were given to understand that their portion of the amount was four shillings and tenpence each. To this they resolutely objected, and became positively offensive. The demand, however, was imperative, and justly so, for they who partake of the usual provision of a regular commercial ordinary ought to know, and not grudge the legitimate expense.

But it too often happens that strangers are anxious to occupy a seat at the commercial table, aware of its being well provided. Time is of importance, when men leave home; and as the dinner is in most instances tolerably punctual in its hour of appearance, they naturally prefer a regular meal, with society, to dining alone off a chop or steak. Some, however, are little inclined to disburse their fair portion of the amount expended in the aggregate; not only taxing the time and constitutions of those belonging to the room, but causing them to pay for and consume more than their just quota of the wine usually ordered. Though men may be lovers of wine, the social beverage is, on business days, of but slight value and importance compared with the time sacrificed in its consumption.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE TO BE DISCONTINUED.

WE greatly regret, and we are sure all other readers of Longman's Magazine will regret, to find that it is to be discontinued, as explained in an editorial note in the September number:

EDITORIAL NOTE.

In reference to the announcement that with this number the publication of Longman's Magazine will be discontinued, the Editor wishes to bid farewell to the subscribers and to the contributors to the Magazine who have supported him during its twenty-three years of life. The list of contributors, numbering nearly five hundred, contains some of the foremost names in Modern English Literature, not all, alas! still with us. To all of these the Editor's thanks are due, but especially to one of them, Mr. Andrew Lang, for his contributions 'At the Sign of the Ship,' and elsewhere.

Since the date of the first appearance of this Magazine, the times have changed in many respects, but in none perhaps more than in regard to periodical literature. The great advance made in cheap processes for the reproduction of drawings and photographs has called into existence a number of magazines and papers depending largely upon their illustrations. Competition for the patronage of the sixpenny public has become very severe, and the mere endeavour to keep up a high literary standard is nowadays not sufficient. It would no doubt have been possible for Longman's Magazine to have followed the prevailing fashion. But those subscribers who have read that Magazine from its first number would perhaps have disliked the change, nor, indeed, could the present writer hope for success in editing a magazine of the newer description. 'Habent sua fata libelli,' and it seemed better, when the time came, to withdraw rather than to attempt to secure a fresh lease of life in a totally different character though under the old name.

* In 1847 Joseph Masters, of Aldersgate Street London, published for the author, Throne Crick, of Leicester, a little work entitled 'Sketches from the Diary of a Commercial Traveller,' from which we give some extracts.—ED P C

Doubtless, some day when the public is surfeited with process blocks, Messrs. Longman will revive their excellent magazine. In any case we hope Mr. Lang's notes will be continued—say in Cornhill, to which he contributes occasionally.

But is Mr. Lang right in the wording of the verse about the celebrated man who saw his eyes were out? Mr. Lang gave it as:—

There was a man of Thessaly,
  And he was wondrous wise;
He jumped into a quickset hedge,
  And scratched out both his eyes.
So when he saw his eyes were out,
  With all his might and main
He jumped into the quickset hedge,
  And scratched them in again!

As the 'Amateur Angler' recounted the tremendous adventure to us nearly half a century ago, it was not a man of Thessaly, but an Englishman, who played the chief part:—

There was a man of Teddington,
  And he was wondrous wise;
He jumped into a hawthorn bush,
  And scratched out both his eyes.
And when he saw his eyes were out,
  He jumped with might and main
Into another hawthorn bush,
  And scratched them in again!

Which version is correct? It is a really important question, because, if he had been an Irishman, what a row there would have been! Another grievance for Ould Oireland!

WHAT CONSTITUTES A SALE?

Sir,—What constitutes a sale? The following experience of mine may be of interest to many of your subscribers:

A well-known dealer in 'rarities' and 'first editions' advertised recently in your columns for a scarce pamphlet which I reported, and for which I straightway received a definite order, the exact title being given on said order. I posted it, but to my great surprise received it back next day, with a curt notice, written across my invoice, saying the writer had made an error in ordering. Although I had sent it by registered post, he had not even the courtesy to refund the postage. I thereupon re-posted it, explaining that I considered the item sold; but it came back as promptly, with a note saying the writer was 'astounded at being treated in this way,' with the information (new to me) that 'things of this class were always sent on approval,' that he 'absolutely refused to take it back,' and finally wound up by an injunction (quite unnecessary) that he 'would ask me never to report anything else or send him my catalogue.'

I remain, Sir,
Easbury, Yours faithfully,
Thames Ditton: F. R. Jones.

[If the facts are as stated, we do not see how the transaction can be considered as anything but a sale.—Ed.]

THE TIMES BOOK SCHEME.

Sir,—Your leading article in your issue of September 23 on 'The Times Book Scheme' seems to me not to represent that scheme quite accurately.

You say, 'The Times buys the books on ordinary terms from the publishers, getting, naturally, the best terms they can.' But the 'best terms' asked for—special discount and guaranteed advertisements—are well known, and if it has succeeded in obtaining these it is enabled to undersell the booksellers without loss to itself.

It can be shown that, according to its own prospectus, new net books can be obtained at discounts of 20 per cent. to 50 per cent., and it has in its power to become a huge underselling bookshop with a monopoly of selling new net books at a large discount, as the regular bookseller is precluded from giving any discount at all.

You say, as indicating how a book may become secondhand, 'A book must be sent back to the Times before its class can be changed, which will not be done so long as it is in good condition, nor even if soiled, provided there is still a demand for it from readers'; but 'some reader may drop a book into her bath or put her tea-cup on it'; and you add, 'in this case the Times then claim the right to sell it as secondhand after, say, a month's use' (the italics are yours), 'which may be three months or more after publication.'

The Times says, 'Clean and injured copies, virtually as good as new, their condition indicating that they have been in circulation for about a month,' will be placed in Class B., and, if 'net' books, sold at 20 per cent. discount, but 'volumes which by reason of accident or exceptionally hard usage fail to satisfy our requirements will not be offered to our subscribers at all, but will be sold through other channels of distribution.'

You say, 'a book must have a month's use (the italics are yours) before it can possibly become second-hand; but it does not follow that because it has had a month's use it will be so sold.' True; but The Times claims the right to decide whether it will or not; and the decision as to whether a book's condition indicates that it has been in circulation for 'about a month' being in the hands of the librarian, he will obviously decide as suits the advantage of the library. It may or it may not be to the advantage of the library to sell a 'net' book after six months' use at 50 per cent. discount; but if the Times has obtained from the publishers the terms it asked, it will always be to its advantage to sell a 'net' book after one month's use at 20 per cent. discount; and seeing that the Times declares that the 'deliberate object of the scheme is spending money instead of making money,' this advantage is not conditional on special terms.

Booksellers would probably not complain if there was any guarantee that the ordinary 'net' books sold had three to six months' 'circulation' in the usual sense of that term. But I fail to see how the guarantee of even one month's circulation is possible. There is truth in the contention 'that people could keep books as long as they liked and thus get a new 'net' book at 50 per cent. off, or more.' What is to prevent a subscriber asking for a new 'net' book, keeping it for a month, and then, when taking it back, saying, 'If you will put that in Class B I will buy it'? The librarian looks at it, and decides that its condition warrants its being placed in Class B, and sells it at 20 per cent. discount. It is always to his advantage so to decide, for he can buy another copy at less than he obtains for the copy sold. Moreover, the Times makes a special appeal to physicians, surgeons, and professional men generally, and offers to put in its library the newest medical and surgical works, and recent editions of standard text-books, technical works, and books of reference. Any one of these could in this way be obtained, after one month's 'use,' at 20 per cent. discount, if a 'net' book. Lastly, the Times offers to supply books to 'clubs, libraries, associations, and institutions'; and, while refusing to extend to them the circulating library service, as 'subscriptions must stand in a personal name,' adds that the circulating library advantages may be obtained 'provided the subscription be taken in any but a corporate name.'

The 'net' book system is now admitted by general consent to have proved of great value to authors, publishers, and booksellers alike—to all engaged in the distribution of books. This success has not been obtained without very great effort and in spite of strenuous opposition from many quarters; but it has been secured. Many attempts have been made to break it down, but through the harmonious working of the Publishers' and Booksellers' Association these attempts have hitherto failed. If this new and startling monopoly is to be granted to the Times, it is the most serious blow the system has yet received, and threatens to make the future working of the 'net' system almost impossible. It is much to be hoped that the publishers and the Times will make some arrangement whereby the security of the 'net' system shall not be shaken.

I am, yours faithfully,
Robert MacLehose.

[As will be seen on reference to our article, it was an attempt to put the scheme from the point of view of its promoters. We had, in the previous issue, called attention to points in it which may be injurious to booksellers and libraries. One feature of the scheme is that books are not labelled or marked in any way, and it seems to us this may make it a very difficult matter to prevent the sale of what are practically new books at second-hand rates. We mean for the Times to prevent its own staff doing so at times, with the best intention to adhere to agreements with the publishers.—Ed.]

Mention the 'P. C.'—Our Readers who order books, &c. they see mentioned or advertised in the Publishers' Circular will do us a great service if they will mention the fact to the Publishers and Wholesale Agents.

The Florence of Landor, by Lilian Whiting, author of 'The World Beautiful,' with 16 full-page illustrations. In 'The Florence of Landor' Lilian Whiting has made a rather new departure—not only from her own previous lines of work, but in the entire range of general literature this book is somewhat unique in conception—its aim being to suggest the living drama that was set in the scenic enchantment of Florence during the period of Walter Savage Landor's life in that 'flower of all cities and city of all flowers,' 1821 to 1864, during which time groups of the most brilliant people of the nineteenth century came and went, or—as in the case of the Brownings and the Trollopes—came and stayed. Lilian

Whiting's pictorial interpretations of Florence are given with the enthusiasm of a devoted lover of the Tuscan capital. The book is fully illustrated from photographs, some of which were taken expressly for this volume, and the frontispiece is from Charles Caryll Coleman's oil portrait of Landor in his latest years, owned by Miss Whiting, and which has never before been reproduced. — Francis Bacon, his Nova Resuscitatio, Exit Shakespeare (but not without Honour), Enter Bacon, by Rev. The author of this work possesses a stud of pure Arab horses which has become known all over the world, and although it is only a hobby, many of his thoroughbreds have been purchased by foreign governments and breeders.—Made in Heaven, 'Anonymous.' 'A sweet love story. It is all the more interesting as the chief characters are rich aristocrats, the men are sportsmen, and the ladies are real although pure.'—Kitty and the Viscount, by Mulvy Ouseley. The author is well known in journalism, but this is his first novel. — My Lady Clancarty, by Mary Imlay Taylor, author of 'On the Red Staircase,' &c., illustrated by Alice Barber Stephens. 'A gallant romance of love and daring, in which the action is swift, the characters are individual, and the atmosphere and setting are well adapted to the theme.'

THE ZOO: A Scamper.

By WALTER EMANUEL.
Illustrated by JOHN HASSALL.

'The combination of two of our modern humourists in pen and pencil has produced in this Scamper one of the earliest and probably one of the most successful picture books of the season. . . . It is a nonsense book pure and simple, but nonsense that will tickle the fancy of old and young alike. Children do not want better stuff about the Zoo.'—DAILY GRAPHIC.

'The ambition to see modern London steadily, and see it whole, has been nourished by several writers of mark, but Mr. Hueffer, we think, has done broader work than any of these, and done it with a continual felicity of style, and a catholicity of sympathy, that make us desire to do the book such honour as we can.'

Notices of Books

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Charles Lamb,' by Walter Jerrold. Though Mr. Jerrold to a large extent follows the method of arrangement adopted in previous volumes of 'Bell's Miniature Series of Great Writers,' the present contribution may be said to have distinct merits of its own. Not that we would say Mr. Jerrold's treatment is invariably beyond reproach, for, truth to tell, he is sometimes for a small work inclined to be discursive, at the expense of other matter which might suitably be introduced; but book series are apt to lapse into a uniform system of expression from which it is pleasurable to perceive some deviation. The life, works, and literary characteristics of Lamb are set forth in a readable form, and for the greater part with sound critical judgment. The most attractive of the five illustrations which adorn the book is the frontispiece, a portrait of Charles Lamb at the age of fifty-one by Henry Mayer, from the original painting at the India Office.

From the same.—'Wagner,' by John F. Runciman. Wagner admits of many interpretations. So do all great composers, either literary or musical. Whether Mr. Runciman's insight is entirely trustworthy we will not say. But at least, in this volume of the 'Miniature Series of Musicians,' he has furnished us with an interesting account of the life of the great musician and his gradual ascent to the position in the musical world that he now occupies. The book is divided practically into two parts:—the life of Wagner; embracing his youth, his career at Magdeburg, Riga, Dresden, Zurich, Paris, Munich, and Triebschen; and his connection with Bayreuth. The volume, after the fashion of its predecessors, is very neatly 'got up,' and there are five illustrations mostly portraits.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Roman Education,' by A. S. Wilkins, Litt.D., LL.D. This little volume is primarily intended for the use of students. It consists of six chapters, the first being introductory to the more specialised treatment of the subject. The remainder successively deal with 'Education in the Early Republic,' 'Education under Greek Influence,' 'Elementary Schools and Studies,' 'Higher Studies' (Rhetoric and Philosophy), and the 'Endowment of Education.' It need hardly be said that Professor Wilkins in the space at his command has handled the subject with complete skill, though occasionally there are matters of detail at which the more captious may cavil.

From the same.—'The Winchester Arithmetic,' by C. Godfrey, M.A., and G. M. Bell, M.A. Our space, unfortunately, will not allow of an enumeration of the principal features of this work as set forth in the preface, but it may generally be commended as a thoroughly well-arranged manual, calculated to be of extreme service to the student in mathematics. The method of education, as contrasted with the value of the information conveyed, is a matter of such supreme importance that a book like this, constructed on the soundest principles as proved by higher experience in teaching, is worthy of the most cordial support.

From the same.—'On Models of Cubic Surfaces,' by W. H. Blythe, M.A. The object of this book, in the words of the author, is to give 'an outline of analytical and geometrical methods that are used in treating of cubic surfaces, not taking the more advanced part of the subject, but considering mainly anything that may help to the construction of models.' Mr. Blythe has obviously devoted much thought to the subject, and his acquaintance with the works of Frost, Salmon, Reye, Klein, Zeuthen, and Sturm denotes a wide reading. The first three chapters treat of equations to cubic surfaces, projective pencils, and miscellaneous problems, while the latter part of the book is devoted to a description of the shapes of the surfaces. In this there are numerous diagrams.

From the same.—'The First Book of Euclid's Elements, with a Commentary based principally upon that of Proclus Diadochus,' by William Barrett Frankland, M.A. This is an extremely scholarly volume, which only an extended knowledge of the subject combined with an infinite capacity for taking pains could have produced. On almost every page there are evidences of the assiduous care bestowed on the work. In an interesting Introduction, Mr. Frankland gives some account of the history of Geometry, especially noting Proclus's connection with the science, and he then proceeds to a consideration of the component parts of his theme under the respective headings of Definitions, Postulates, Axioms, and Propositions. The book is in all practical respects excellent; but does not the author's enthusiasm carry him a little too far when he says, 'In sorrow and bereavement, in suffering and weakness, the Geometer learns laws of human nature and bounties of Divine Grace of a higher order and of a deeper truth than all that logical theories of space can afford'?

From the Caxton Publishing Company, Chancery Lane.—'Monograms and Ciphers,' designed and drawn by A. A. Turbayne and other Members of the Carlton Studio. We have already in these columns described the useful character of this serial production and shown the aim of its conductors. The present part, constituting the third of the seven divisions in which the work is to be completed, displays the same good qualities of design and execution commented upon when dealing with a previous issue.

From Messrs. Chapman & Hall, Ltd.—'Beggars' Luck,' by Nellie K. Blissett. This is a bright, vivacious romance of French life during the reign of Louis XIV., evolved, we should imagine, from an intimate acquaintance with recent fiction of this kind rather than an earnest study of the period. The framework of the story, moreover, is a little worn, seeing that several novels have of late been built on a similar structure, i.e. the evil designs of a buoyant, gallant hero towards a woman whom he afterwards falls passionately in love with. However, Miss Blissett is undeniably interesting if readers will kindly not look beneath the surface of events and expect a fairly sensible reason for the actions of the characters instead of a fine artificial theatrical display. The hero, scion of a noble family reduced to beggary, accidentally meets with a fascinating, unscrupulous woman who, to achieve her own purposes, bribes him to take action against a young girl who eventually, using purely feminine arts, proves more than his master. Such a plot to be completely successful requires to be carried through with extreme vigour, and any relapse on the reader's part into the realms of reason is to be distinctly avoided. Unfortunately the scaffolding of Miss Blissett's story is frequently suggestive of cardboard, and all the paint and theatrical tinsel she has laid on will not disguise its true character. She has apparently always had the stage in view, and her puppets, emotional though some of the parts they play may be, lack the convincing attributes of real life.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'The Cotter's Saturday Night,' by Robert Burns, illustrated by A. S. Boyd. We have, we may candidly confess, been a little disappointed in this edition of Burns's well-known work. Obviously the desire has been to supply a suitable setting to the poem, but the execution we cannot but think falls short of the intention. Mr. Boyd's illustrations, which naturally constitute a noteworthy feature of the volume, though occasionally very good, showing an insight into Scottish characteristics which only one of the brotherhood could possess, scarcely as a rule rise to the height of the occasion, and a serious drawback in our opinion is to be found in the thick, heavily coated paper which has apparently been found necssary to their effective production. Still, these defects notwithstanding, the volume, unless considered by the highest canons of art, is very attractive, and may confidently be relied upon to please a wide community of Burns-lovers. The method has been followed to print the poem in its entirety in the earlier portion of the volume, and then to give the illustrations, each being faced by the lines which have led to its conception.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The First Book of Geometry,' by Grace Chisholm Young, Ph.D., and W. H. Young, M.A., Sc.D. The authors of this volume point out that the study of geometry at the secondary and primary schools suffers considerably from the fact that the scholars have not previously acquired the habit of geometrical observation. It may be presumed, therefore, that in this respect they propose to place educational methods on a better footing, and the task sounds formidable. But when we come to the book itself everything (making due allowance for the abstruse character of the subject) seems of the simplest construction, and the authors have apparently evolved from the most hopeless material a clear and consecutive idea that will powerfully appeal to the juvenile searcher after mathematical truths. The book, we may say, is quite as much intended for home teaching as the public school-room, since it requires no special apparatus, blackboard, or other educational appliance, nor does it necessitate any particular training in the teacher. Numerous diagrams and clear explanations, far removed from stereotyped methods, make everything comparatively easy.

From the same.—'Brahms,' by J. Lawrence Erb. Few lovers of music will dispute that Mr. Erb has done his work well in this volume of 'The Master Musicians.' Admirers of Brahms will be even less disposed to question his treatment. For it must be confessed that a thorough-going admiration of the German composer is very manifest in the book. Not that this becomes completely apparent until the later stages of the volume, when the author enlarges from the biographical details of Brahms' life into a criticism of the man and his work. Mr. Erb concludes his monograph with the following estimate of the celebrated musician, which we may safely leave to the consideration of musical readers. 'Brahms' possessed creative ability of the highest order, an unusually keen intellect, wide culture, and absolute mastery of technical material. Add to this a sanity of mind and breadth of view, which have, unfortunately, been unusual among great musicians, and we have a personality both uncommon and commanding,'

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'My Lady Clancarty: being the True Story of the Earl of Clancarty and Lady Elizabeth Spencer,' by Mary Imlay Taylor. There is a fine flavouring of romance in this story, the scene of which is laid in the times of William of Orange. Lady Elizabeth Spencer, who had been married at the age of eleven to the Earl of Clancarty, is depicted as growing up into a most beauteous maid, with a deep passion for her exiled husband, whom she has not seen since her marriage day. Staunch to the ties that bind her, she remains true to his memory even against the wishes of her father, mother, and puritanical brother. Then Clancarty returns to this country under an assumed name, and seeks out his wife. She, intuitively penetrating his disguise, is tormented by doubts as to his identity, for her heart has impulsively gone out to this masterful, handsome stranger. Eventually explanations are made, but in the moment of an understanding Clancarty is taken prisoner by the King's men and consigned to the Tower, with slight hopes of his life. The young wife's appeal on behalf of her husband to William III. is eventually successful, and the story ends happily. It is not a particularly vigorous piece of work, but the womanly sentiment will, without doubt, endear it to a large body of readers.

From Messrs. H. Grevel & Co.—'Florence,' by Adolf Philippi. This belongs to the illustrated series of 'Famous Art Cities,' flat thin books which go easily into the side of a tourist's portmanteau, and can be looked at with profit in his hotel before he visits church, piazza, palazzo, or museum. Philippi's 'Florence' contains 170 clear and useful process pictures of bronzes and sculptures and paintings by Tuscan artists and of representative Florentine interiors and exteriors of sacred and secular buildings. The English translation, by P. G. Konody, of Philippi's German is well done, but there is evidence that the compositors were German in the spelling of 'Eduard III.' on p. 30, 'hat been' p. 74, 'hart outline' p. 141, 'jonic' pp. 113, 123 (instead of Ionic). On p. 105 'fig. 12' should be 'fig. 16,' on p. 137 'p. 103' should be 'p. 102,' and on p. 149 'p. 129' ought to be 'p. 128.' No doubt the references are to the right pages in the German original. There are chapters on history, on architecture, on sculpture, on paintings, so arranged as to give the reader a knowledge of the growth and development from age to age of Florentine political and artistic life. The selection of objects to be illustrated is very well made; but though the figure of Boniface VIII. in the Cathedral is justly condemned as artistically poor, we should like to have seen reproduced this early representation of the Pope Dante was visiting when Florence sentenced him to exile. We cannot understand why no notice is taken of Benvenuto Cellini, though some of his workmanship is very dimly to be discerned in the picture on p. 61.

From Mr. T. Werner Laurie.—'With the Eyes of a Man,' by Hubert Bland. This is a book that may very pleasantly be employed to 'frivol' an idle hour away. It suggests humorous fancies, passes lightly over the vagaries of society life—in short, amuses without impelling the mind to serious reflection. Mr. Bland knows his world well; and though, judging from his portrait, which figures as a frontispiece to the volume, we might have expected more weighty reflections from him, he is probably wise to go with the current of the times and aim solely at entertaining piquancy. Of this there is plenty in his volume, whether concerning 'Some Ways of Love,' 'A Plea for the Powder Puff,' 'Beauty,' 'The Future of Flirtation,' 'The Duel of Sex,' or other superficial subjects, and the reader, especially if of the feminine persuasion, may confidently rely upon being amused while in the author's company. But afterwards—when the book is laid down—we are afraid she will remember him no more than any of the other society jesters who contribute to her animated passage through life.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'Andrew Marvell,' by Augustine Birrell. It is no doubt a little difficult to write convincingly of Andrew Marvell; the poet's personality was of that indefinable though fascinating character which hardly lends itself to cold, intellectual criticism. Moreover, he would seem to have been somewhat of a turncoat—a Royalist during the reign of Charles I., a Roundhead when the overmastering Cromwell came into power, and, again, a genial, free-and-easy judge of life at the time of the Restoration. Perhaps, however, this is common in the man of fine literary distinction, ever susceptible to the influences of the moment. On the whole, Mr. Birrell has effectively combated with the difficulties attending his task. His sympathy with Marvell on one side of his character—as a controversialist—might naturally be expected, but in other ways he has shown an able perception of the poet's character, and has rendered his biography extremely interesting reading by numerous quiet touches, which all aid in producing a remarkably realistic portrait of the man. Looking back over the long list of distinguished writers who have afforded material for the 'English Men of Letters' series, we can remember few more adroitly treated, or into whose temperament a more delicate, critical insight has been shown.

From the Office, 57 and 59 Ludgate Hill, E.C.—'Young England: an Illustrated Magazine for Boys.' Twenty-sixth annual volume, 1904-5. Life and vivacity, with due attention to sports, domestic pets, and mechanical appliances are what the schoolboy reverences most in his reading, and the present volume will certainly gratify him in this respect. Fiction is especially prominent in its pages, there being no less than three serial stories of an adventurous character likely to charm his fancy, besides any number of shorter tales. The illustrations also are calculated to increase his interest. Both in the quality and quantity of its contents, this volume of 'Young England' is certain to afford the young reader immense pleasure.

From Messrs. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 'Saint Cecilia of the Court,' by Isabella R. Hess. This is a story that comes to us from the other side of the herring-pond, and in some respects distinctly reveals its nationality. However, it is certainly nothing the worse for that, seeing that it has a sturdiness of style which is an agreeable relief after the extreme artificiality to which we ourselves are so frequently subjected. On the other hand, St. Cecilia, the poor little girl of the squalid court in New York, who is intended to elicit our sympathies, somewhat fails from what one may term a matter-of-fact method of construction; there is a lack of art, a certain clumsiness, so to speak, in the unfolding of the character. The majority of readers will no doubt not notice this, and the experiences of Cecilia Angelina Sweeney in her relations with her drunken mother, and dearly-loved little brother, 'Puddin',' to say nothing of other surroundings, are certain to awaken lively interest.

From Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd., we have received a number of attractive reprints which are worthy of attention. An edition in two volumes, on thin paper and limp leather bound, of Boswell's 'Life of Dr. Johnson,' especially calls for favourable notice; and equal praise is due to a new issue of Stopford Brooke's interesting work on the 'Poetry of Robert Browning,' also in two volumes, and of similar binding. The 'Boswell,' we should mention, is abridged, and edited by G. Nugent Bankes and Hinchcliffe Higgins, and contains an Introduction by the indefatigable Mr. G. K. Chesterton. Other works now published in cheap form are 'John Wesley's Journal, abridged by Percy Livingstone Parker, with an Introduction by Hugh Price Hughes, M.A., and an Appreciation of the Journal by Augustine Birrell, K.C.; and 'George Fox's Journal,' abridged by Percy Livingstone Parker, with an Introduction by Dr. Robertson Nicoll and Various Appreciations.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The Chariots of the Lord,' by Joseph Hocking. Mr. Hocking's story, which we should imagine from its construction to have been originally designed for serial publication, concerns the adventures of one Master Benedict Trelawney, who, having incurred the enmity of the notorious Judge Jeffreys in the reign of James II., has many narrow squeaks for his life. Fortunately he has gained the secret affection of Lady Mary, Jeffreys' reputed daughter, and it is she who, after a delightfully romantic fashion, aids him in his numerous escapes. Her character is a little incomprehensible, seeing that she apparently only rescues him in order later to hand him over to his enemies, after this fashion keeping up the excitement of the narrative. But after the rising of the Duke of Monmouth, among whose followers the impetuous Trelawney enrols himself, matters assume an exceedingly grave aspect, and the hero's life is scarcely worth an hour's purchase. Ultimately he finds his way to the Court of William of Orange, and his representations are largely instrumental in bringing about the invasion of England by that prince. Mr. Hocking writes vigorously, and with a keen eye for dramatic effect. He utilises the events of history to considerable purpose, and may generally be commended for a healthy, animated story likely to have exceptional interest for romantic readers. The illustrations by Adolf Thiede are quite in sympathy with the character of the narrative.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons, Ltd.—'Sky-High: a Flight of Fancy for Children,' by Dorothy Furniss. This, as its title would indicate, is a very lively work, and admirably calculated to please young people. The adventures of Bessie and Ben in search of their fortune are of a most remarkable character, to which additional emphasis is imparted by the numerous illustrations, coloured and plain. Of course, the fairy godmother has a hand in the matter, and it is to her good offices, we suppose, we must attribute the eventual finding of a pot of gold, which the children carry home in triumph to their parents, and, unlike the usual discoverers of hidden treasure, live happily ever after. The account of their marvellous experiences, as so strikingly depicted in the illustrations, is bound to provoke the round-eyed astonishment of juvenile readers, and to cause them to be amazingly jealous.

MACMILLAN & CO., Ltd., LONDON.

the Rev. H. J. Wilmot-Buxton, M.A. All these sermons enforce sound scriptural truths, but they bear such a strong family resemblance to the thousands of exhortations every Sunday delivered in our numerous churches that really we may be pardoned for questioning their claims to the special distinction of book publication. They are certainly calculated to have a good influence, which is the only criticism we feel called upon to make.

From the same.—'The Seed and the Soil: a Series of Short Plain Sermons,' by the Rev. J. B. C. Murphy, B.A. This is the first volume of 'Skeffington's Sermon Library.' The idea affecting its production, if we may judge from the preface to the present volume, is that numberless sermons are consigned to oblivion which from their general character and eloquence of expression are capable of excellent service in the cause of religion. In the present instance, Mr. Murphy expounds his views clearly and forcibly with a freedom from conventional expression that goes far towards conveying conviction.

From Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co., Ltd.—'The Needs of Man: a Book of Suggestions,' by W. Winslow Hall, M.D. If Dr. Hall's object in this volume is to furnish food for thought, then undoubtedly has he succeeded. We may be far from agreeing with many of his views, but it is impossible not to be attracted by the originality of his reflections. The volume is divided into four parts, respectively dealing with the bodily, mental, moral, and spiritual needs of man. The first-named are evidently, in the opinion of the author, the most important, since they number seven, whereas the mental only count for four, the moral two, and the spiritual one. Interspersed with the essays are a number of verses, which, besides showing the development through different stages of the Rondel, impart an agreeable variety to the volume.

BOOKS WANTED

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have difficulty in obtaining the titles.
3. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
4. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of an Advertisement of four titles free each week in these columns, and can have extra titles at 3d. per title prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per title prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one title.

THE CHEAPEST COMPREHENSIVE DICTIONARY IN THE WORLD.

THE S.P.C.K. ENCYCLOPÆDIC DICTIONARY

Is the LARGEST DICTIONARY published—over 200,000 words.

It is an easier, simpler, handier DICTIONARY than any other, and is an ENCYCLOPÆDIA as well.

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES OF THE 'ENCYCLOPÆDIA DICTIONARY.'

Its comprehensiveness, and its wideness of range in point of time.
The 'Encyclopædia Dictionary,' by combining in one all these special glossaries or vocabularies, effects a double saving, an economy of time and money.
Its richness and completeness of the illustrative quotations.
Its thoroughly encyclopædic character.

EDUCATION OR REVOLUTION.*

The 'Net' Result.

THE Librairie Armand Colin, of Paris, every now and then sends us some book which seems likely to interest English readers. One of the latest is 'Education ou Révolution,' a reprint of a series of addresses by M. Gabriel Séailles, who appears to us to be one of the most sensible and sane of modern French reformers. Without necessarily agreeing with all his views, one cannot refuse admiration for the sincerity, ability, and audacity with which he states them. He is a Socialist, but if all Socialists were like him the human race would soon improve and the net book system be universally adopted.

In one of his chapters he says, using words for which we have no quite satisfactory equivalents, 'les savants, les intellectuels,' have not less to receive from the people than they have to give to them. The 'literary life' has its dangers: it separates thought from action, it makes men so curious as to what has been thought and as to what has been felt by others before them that they have no time to think or feel on their own account; men who, by force of their habit of delicately weighing conflicting arguments, oscillate between them in a state of perpetual indecision. Detached from active life, the idea becomes with them something abstract, an algebraic sign to be used as one pleases, which one can bend with impunity to suit the whims of some subtle and paradoxical logic, and this not entailing that the error should find its punishment in its immediate consequences.

It was the Athenæum, we think, which, in referring to the great learning of the late Lord Acton, said he was so absorbed in accumulating and assimilating all knowledge that he seemed to have no time or even inclination to produce great works himself—an instance, and a striking one, of what M. Séailles refers to as a danger of the literary life. If great intellects only assimilated, theirs would indeed be a sterile existence.

Asking the question why 'our literature,' by which he means French literature—though the term to some extent applies to all modern literature—why 'our literature' is so 'mediocre and miserable,' he answers it by saying it is because it is detached from the popular conscience. 'Our writers shut themselves up in "upper rooms," in little coteries; they wish to be uncommon, distinguished, different; they speak of their "moi" with the coquetry of girls; some even, like beggars on fête days, to attract attention exhibit their ugliness and deformities; the clever ones amuse those who pay to read about their own scandals, and serve up for them the filth on which they love to feed. Then for the people there is the "latest news," the "newest crime," of silly newspapers'—'publicity and crime,' as the Spectator says. Appealing to his audience, M. Séailles cries: 'You must aid us to get out of that. Our blasé art looks at life as did the elders at chaste Susanna; it sullies and soils it, and then dishonours and slanders it. Art will not revive until, deserting the salons, and leaving behind the subtleties, false delicacies, and refinements of a morbid sensuality, it again enters into the city of men. No longer speaking for a privileged few, but for all, its voice will strengthen and expand; it will find again, in hearts fresh as at the first day, the blossom-time of eternal sentiments, of true sorrow, of tears which are worth crying, of joy, of invincible hope, and, resuming its mission, far from humiliating man and life, it will exalt courage by the joyfulness of heroic thoughts. The people comprehend only the most beautiful, most universal works, works truly human, which awake an echo in all hearts. Then we shall get again simplicity in grandeur.'

By Art our author, of course, means all art, and one wonders, for instance, how he would characterise that picture of Germany leading England and the other white nations against the Yellow Peril which the German Emperor gave to the world some years ago. Also one wonders how the Emperor would paint that picture to-day with England and Japan arm in arm.

'Vere is dat barty now?'

'In a democracy it is necessary,' says our author, 'that the workers and the thinkers should go hand in hand, it is necessary that they should listen to each other, explain to each other, understand each other, that they should ever more and more realise the solidarity which makes them workers in a work which cannot be accomplished but by their joint efforts.'

We do not share the opinion of those who think that a trade journal should never wander into the fields of philosophy—even by accident—for us the moral of all this is that unless our Publishers and Booksellers unite to fight against the Peril of the Press they will find that they are nourishing a new system which will in time destroy not only the net system, but the entire present system of publishing books. If there is any truth in the assertions one so often hears at public functions when Publishers and Booksellers meet—brave statements of mutual regard and mutual interests, that what injures one damages the other, and so on—if there is any truth in all this, why do they not unite to fight when their interests are threatened—since one cannot be damaged and the other escape injury? Millions of copies of a London penny weekly paper carry an appeal to the public to buy its books and save 'the middleman's profit,' and we are told that so great is the demand for the books that the proprietors are extending their offer to all the world, that the books contain the world's best literature, and so on. In time, no doubt, when they have been assisted to success and become independent by the help of the present producers of books, they will dispense with the publisher's profit and do the production themselves. Perhaps the best prayer the trade can put up is that these bookselling papers should become book publishers also—quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat.

Suppose, for a moment, that instead of books the newspapers had dashed into the boot trade, and offered to supply the public with boots at 'less than cost,' 'no middleman's profit,' &c., there would have been such a strike—kick one might fairly call it—in the boot trade as all the latest 'football editions' together could not record.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. are publishing immediately a new book by the Rev. William Holden Hutton, of Oxford, entitled 'Burford Papers,' consisting mainly of the letters of one, Samuel Crisp, a man of letters and fashion of the eighteenth century, written from London and other fashionable centres of the day to his sister at Burford. The further illustrations which are gained from these letters of the circle in which Fanny Burney moved at the time of her first great success will be welcomed by all those who take interest in the doings of Dr. Johnson, the Thrales, and their coterie. The other details, familiar and domestic, in the correspondence, and the picture which the writer of the letters gives of himself, sketch pleasantly the life of the period.

Lord Edmond Fitzmaurice's 'Life of the Second Earl Granville,' which will be published by Messrs. Longmans, Green & Co. on Monday next, is eagerly looked for in political and social circles, and will be in great demand.

In his important new work entitled 'Sea Power in its Relation to the War of 1812,' Captain A. T. Mahan has brought the knowledge acquired in a lifetime of expert study, together with an exceptional command of government and private documents; and in such vital matters as the impressment of American seamen and privateer records he has been able to make valuable additions to the world's knowledge. Captain Mahan presents in a series of vivid pictures the stirring events of the war, the points of single ship fights and squadron actions, giving due attention to the strategic interest of campaigns on the land and the diplomacy of the time. His new work is a contribution to history of the greatest value. It will be published in two volumes with photogravure frontispieces, maps, battle plans, and twenty-three full-page plates in half-tone from original illustrations by Stanley M. Arthurs, Henry Reuterdahl, Carlton T. Chapman, &c., by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

Anne Warner, the creator of 'Susan Clegg,' has written another clever story entitled 'The Rejuvenation of Aunt Mary,' which Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. will publish this month. 'Aunt Mary' is a capital creation, and the account of her adventures in New York is said to be brimful of brightness and humour. A pretty love story runs through the book.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. are producing a series of useful works for the household, to be published under the title of 'Cassell's Home Handbooks.' They will include 'The Home Lawyer,' written with a view of furnishing a plain and simple statement of the law of the land for the householder and man of business; 'The Home Physician,' designed to be a guide and counsellor in the case of illness, both of children and adults. A number of other works of a similarly useful character for the home will also be included. The series will be ready during the present month.

Mr. Arthur Symons, poet and essayist, will publish shortly through Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. a new volume entitled 'Spiritual Adventures,' being a series of studies in temperament.

Mr. Heinemann will publish immediately a new illustrated edition, revised and brought up to date, of Mr. Edmund Gosse's 'Short History of English Literature.' This work deals with English Literature from its origin in early Saxon times to the age of Tennyson, Matthew Arnold, and Robert Louis Stevenson. In no single volume on the subject is so much learning so attractively displayed. The new edition has seventy-two full-page illustrations in photogravure and half-tone.

The new work by Mr. Arnold White and Mr. Hallam Moorhouse, entitled 'Nelson and the Twentieth Century,' will be published on Friday next by Messrs. Cassell & Co. In the preparation of the volume the authors have secured the assistance of no fewer than four admirals on the active list—each of them the highest authority on the special subject on which his counsel has been sought—as well as of other naval officers, and of the Chairman of the Navy League, Mr. Seymour Trower.

Readers interested in the motor cycle may like to know that the 150 miles non-stop run for the 'Brown' Trophy will be illustrated and described in the Motor Cycle of the 16th inst.

We learn from the New York Publishers' Weekly that the W. B. Conkey Co. have added new volumes to their 'Ajax Padded' edition of the poets. Shade of Homer!

The Onlooker's double Autumn Number has an attractive coloured cover after a very clever drawing by R. Pannett, and all the illustrations are admirably printed.

Messrs. Dent & Co. have been steadily adding to their list each season new books on Italian Art, Architecture, Manners, Scenery and Life, both of to-day and of yesterday, but particularly books on Mediæval and Renaissance Italy. It will be remembered that Messrs. Dent & Co. were the original publishers of Mr. Maurice Hewlett's 'Earthwork Out of Tuscany.' They have two new Italian books in preparation; one, entitled 'Notable Pictures in Florence,' is a guide to the masterpieces in that city, by Miss Edith Harwood. It will have about 150 illustrations in miniature from the originals. The other book is an addition to the increasing number of books on 'the blessed little one of Assisi,' Saint Francis. It is an account of the pictures in Italian Art inspired by legends and stories of St. Francis, and the title is 'Franciscan Legends in Italian Art.' Miss E. Gurney Salter is the author, and there will be 20 illustrations in the book. Miss Salter translated Bonaventura's 'Life of St. Francis' and 'The Legend of the Three Companions' for the 'Temple Classics.'

The Rev. C. Silvester Horne, M.A., has just completed his volume in the 'Eras of Nonconformity' series. The volume, which is entitled 'Nonconformity in the Nineteenth Century,' will be published on Wednesday, October 11.

The special feature of the October number] of the British Empire Review (the official organ of the British Empire League) is an article by Lieut-General Sir Edwin Collen, G.C.I.E., C.B., on 'British Rule in India and Recent Events.'

Mr. John Lane will publish on the 10th, 'Display: a Romance,' by R. E. S. Spender. Mr. Spender expounds the tremendous lengths to which the modern newspaper is prepared to go in determining public opinion.

The Earl of Beaconsfield's 'Vivian Grey,' reprinted in the 'New Pocket Library,' containing an Introduction by the Earl of Iddesleigh, is announced for the same day.

On December 1 will be published the first number of a new quarterly magazine entitled Northern Notes and Queries, devoted to the antiquities of Northumberland, Cumberland, Westmorland, and Durham. It will be edited by Mr. H. S. Leighton, and published by Mr. M. S. Dodds, of Newcastle.

Next to Captain Mahan's, in the October United Service Magazine, the best of all the articles on Nelson which we have seen is that by Miss Esher Hallam in the current number of the National Review, entitled 'A Century's Praise of Nelson.' She writes with such proud patriotism and absolute appreciation of what Nelson was, and is, and ever will be, to her countrymen and countrywomen. The 'Nelson Touch' stirs the heart of every Briton. At our next Trafalgar there will be no need of any message to the Fleet; every ship will go into battle flying the signal, 'Remember Nelson.'

Mr. Walter Belcher, Bookseller, Bridgwater, writes: 'The version I have heard in Wiltshire of verses quoted by Mr. Lang is as follows:

There was a man of Worcestershire,
And he was wondrous wise;
He jumped into a quickset hedge,
And scratched out both his eyes,
And when he found his eyes were out,
Being filled with grief and pain,
He jumped into a gooseberry bush
And scratched them in again.

Mr. Belcher adds, 'How could he see his eyes were out?' That is what spoils the Wiltshire version. Mr. Belcher might as well ask 'How could he scratch his eyes in again?'

Mr. George Allen has ready a new pocket edition of his charming issue of Hans Andersen's 'Stories and Tales,' translated by H. O. Sommer, and illustrated by A. J. Gaskin; also a new novel by Mrs. F. Reynolds entitled 'The Making of Michael,' and one by R. B. and Dorothea Townshend entitled 'The Bride of a Day.'

As Mr. James Milne, in the October mber of his excellent Book Monthly, observes: 'It is, without doubt, a time of 'Times' in the book world, of excursions and alarums' and what not; and somehow the occasion sets one thinking of various happenings, say, since the three-volume novel departed this life.'

The Gresham Publishing Company have begun the publication of a most important work, entitled 'The Horse, its Treatment in Health and Disease, with a complete Guide to Breeding, Training, and Management,' in eight volumes, superbly illustrated and edited by Professor I. Wortley Axe, M.R.C.V.S. Vol. 1 is now ready, and an illustrated prospectus, with coloured plates, can be had by all booksellers who have customers interested in the horse.

THE LATE MR. FRANK GEORGE.

Frank George, of 89 Park Street, Bristol, and 7 Ellenborough Crescent, Weston-super-Mare, departed this life September 25, 1905, aged 49. —R.I.P.

By Mr. George's death the book trade loses one of its most interesting personalities. His charm of manner, his scrupulous sense of strict rectitude of conduct, both in his private life and his business relations, make a void which it will be impossible to fill. His death will come as a deep shock to all the trade throughout the kingdom. As one who has known him intimately for more than twenty-five years, the writer had many opportunities of seeing much of his whole-hearted sympathy with any case of distress or need, not only in the trade but generally. To Frank George is almost entirely due that happy and genial working together of the members of the old book trade in the West of England. He, by his example and endeavours, inaugurated and cemented that kind comradeship amongst booksellers 'down west' which has spread all over the kingdom. He was a member of the Church of England, and for some time a hard worker under the vicar of St. George's, Bristol. He used to assist in the services of the Mission Chapel in St. George's parish on Sundays and during Lent, &c. He was honorary treasurer of the large Penny Bank, keeping all the books, &c., in a very poor and populous district. It was due solely to his initiative that the annual dinner of the old booksellers of Bath and Bristol was founded upwards of twenty-five years ago. To show his feelings for others, he simultaneously with this event inaugurated the Christmas dinner to one hundred poor people of Bristol. Mr. Frank George took the whole of the responsibility upon his shoulders. There is no doubt that his self-sacrificing endeavours to help others has eventually shortened what might otherwise have been a long life. Some eighteen months ago Mr. George met with an accident through falling down the stairs of a restaurant at Plymouth, and though he apparently got well, he was never the man afterwards. He went to Italy to try to recoup quite recently, but all his friends saw a great change had come over the energetic, and, in the old days, almost tireless Frank. After his return from Italy he gradually got worse, and the end came somewhat suddenly, though not unexpectedly, on Monday, September 25. He was buried with his mother at Arno's Vale Cemetery, Bristol, upon the Feast of St. Michael and all Angels. A large concourse of friends followed him to his last resting-place, including Mr. George Hare Leonard, jun., Mrs. Smith (Weston-super-Mare), Mr. J. E. Pritchard (Bristol, hon. sec. of the Bristol and Gloucester Archæological Society, deceased being a member of that body and of the Somersetshire Archæological Society), Mr. George Gregory (Bath), Mr. Walter Nield, Mr. Ashton Nield, Mr. Edward Nield, and other members of the book Trade, Mr. W. S. Hawker, Mr. Tom Mathews, Mr. James George, Mr. Will. King, Mrs. Sidney Smith, and Mr. John Fisher (Kensington School of Art, Bristol). Mr. George leaves a widow and seven children to mourn him (four sons and three daughters). The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. T. H. S. Polehampton, vicar of St. Paul's, Weston-super-Mare (with which church he has been identified since he had resided there), and the Rev. C. Ramsden, vicar of Cleeve. Besides floral tributes from the members of deceased's family were many from friends and the Trade, including a magnificent wreath from the London Trade: 'In affectionate memory of our friend, Frank George, with deepest sympathy,' signed personally by Messrs Sotheran & Co., Quaritch, Ben Bailey, Geo Suckling, L. C. Braun, Charles Jackson, G. Roche, G. Rimell, E. Joseph, Francis Edwards, R. Thurgate, B. Maggs, H. Maggs, F. Sabin, Walford Bros., T. Thorpe, J. Rogers, &c.; also one from Mr. J. G. Commin, of Exeter, 'with deepest sympathy and in loving memory of one ever ready to help others,' from John Hitchman, William Downing, and James Wilson (Birmingham); 'In affectionate remembrance,' from R. C. Moore; a large cross from the Bristol and Bath Booksellers; and wreath from the employees.

MR. FRANK GEORGE (BRISTOL).

'Lord, all pitying, Jesu Blest,
Grant him Thine eternal rest.'
'Write me as one who loved his fellow-men.'

Mr. Frank George was born in 1856, and was the second son of the late William George, the founder of the great firm of Bristol booksellers (William George's Sons). He entered business in 1874; became partner in 1889. The deceased gentleman was educated at Bristol Grammar School and in Switzerland.

Weston-super-Mare (where he resided of recent years) has much to thank Frank George for. He took great interest in the Public Library there, and it was entirely due to his exertions that Weston possesses the magnificent library of antiquarian, historical, and topographical books which the great antiquarian, the late F. A. Wood, Esq., of Chew Magna, willed to the town at his decease some two or three years since. Mr. George was chairman of the Weston Library Committee. Like the writer of this article, Mr. George deeply regretted the tendency of fiction in public libraries to swamp the study of literature.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE CLARENDON PRESS.

SHAKESPEARE'S POEMS AND PERICLES.

THE Clarendon Press is preparing a reproduction in facsimile, with Introductions by Mr. Sidney Lee, of the earliest editions of that portion of Shakespeare's work which found no place in the First Folio, viz. Pericles and the four volumes of Poems—Venus and Adonis, Lucrece, Sonnets, and the Passionate Pilgrim.

Each volume will be reproduced by the Collotype process from the finest accessible copy of the original issue.

The five reproductions will be printed on O.W. paper, the size being 10 in. by 8 in. They will be issued in four styles of binding: in five volumes, not sold separately, either (a) in real vellum with kid leather ties (the precise form of the original binding), at £6 5*s*. net the set; or (b) in paper boards imitating vellum, with ties, after the original manner of binding, at £3 10*s*. net the set; or in a single volume (c) in rough calf, at £4 4*s*. net; or (d) in paper boards, at £3 3*s*. net.

The number of copies printed will be 1,000.

MORTIMER'S READY-RECKONER FOR BOOKSELLERS AND 'WORKING EXPENSES.'*

THE new edition of this extremely useful little work includes the new series of figures made necessary by the net book system. It is a work every bookseller should possess. With regard to the statement and example on p. 207, which Mr. Mortimer informs us 'was designed to bring home to the trade the fact that a great deal of their business is done below cost,' the statement is that 'working expenses vary from 15 to 20 per cent. on turnover.' We are informed by one whom we regard as a very competent authority that it is absolutely fallacious to estimate profit or loss on such a ratio of working expenses to turnover. Working expenses, he argues, must consist very largely of rent and fixed charges, which do not vary according to the amount of turnover. One man may turn over his capital ten times in a year, another only twice. The working expenses of the former will probably not be a fifth of those of the former as compared with turnover. 'The sensible man who knows that he has to pay rent, rates, taxes, and wages, whether he sells a particular book or does not sell it, will gladly welcome as money earned whatever will pay his expenses on that one transaction, and leave something over to go to general expenses.'

THE LATE SIR WEMYSS REID.

THERE are some men to whom success comes unsought, though not unmerited. Of such was the late Sir Wemyss Reid. Beginning life as a clerk in a mercantile office in his native town, Newcastle-on-Tyne, his amateur contributions to a local paper led to his being invited to join the regular staff, and in the same way his successive promotions until he became editor of the Leeds Mercury, and after this the general manager of a great publishing house, came to him without his seeking. Though first and foremost a journalist, he was also biographer, novelist, publicist, clubman, and the friend and confidant of distinguished men, and it would be strange if in his 'Memoirs' he had failed to make the most of his opportunities. The volume is edited, with an Introduction, by Mr. Stuart J. Reid, his brother, and is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co.

'THE SUCCESSFUL BOOKSELLER, STATIONER, AND FANCY GOODS DEALER.'

WE are glad to direct attention to the prospectus enclosed with to-day's issue of THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, of what claims to be a most important book for the bookseller.

From particulars sent to us by the author, who we are delighted to hear is a successful bookseller, the book is intended as a guide. The whole conduct of an up-to-date and fully equipped bookselling, stationery, and fancy goods business, with circulating library, is freely discussed, the best methods of management combining economy and efficiency noticed, and, in addition to appealing directly to those already established in business on their own account, has many chapters which would give assistants a clearer insight into the management and control of a business, thus fitting them for better and more responsible positions.' We know of no other book which would be more suitable to a beginner in the trade than one really well done on these lines, as we hope this will prove to be. The price is 6*s*. net to subscribers in the trade before publication.

WHISTLERIANA.

THE large public which interests itself in all that concerns the art and life of the late Mr. J. McNeill Whistler will be glad to know that there is in active preparation what is called a 'Whistler Compendium,' which will contain a comprehensive bibliography of the writings by and on Mr. Whistler, with a list of portraits, sketches and caricatures of him. It will also contain a chronological list of exhibitions and a catalogue of all the more important catalogues. The compiler is Mr. S. D. Shallard, who possesses an invaluable collection of Whistler memoranda, the result of many years' arduous collecting. It is to be issued in a limited edition by Messrs. Otto Schulze & Co., of Edinburgh.

For all NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, and PERIODICALS send your subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, LTD., Cannon House, Bream's Buildings, London (established 1809). Catalogue gratis.

FORTHCOMING BOOK AUCTIONS.

IT is a noticeable fact, and one welcome to all booksellers, that as soon as the literary auctioneers announce that the autumn season is about to commence, trade begins to look up. The sales must be attended in order to make fresh purchases which will replenish and renew the stock, and commissions come in which have to be executed, while that friendly intercourse or camaraderie so often seen in the literary auction rooms can be once more resumed. It will be seen from another column that Messrs. Hodgson & Co. announce a good list of sales commencing on October 10, the catalogues of which will contain not only fine books of rarity and value, but also those more ordinary standard works which it is necessary for every bookseller to stock. We much regret that, owing to an unfortunate oversight, the announcement of the first two sales was not inserted in our issue of last week.

'IN THE MARCH AND BORDERLAND OF WALES.'

MR. A. G. BRADLEY is about to issue through Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. a new volume entitled 'In the March and Borderland of Wales,' with sketches of the country by W. M. Meredith, and a map. The author's previous records of countryside wanderings have made his style of writing well known. Readers will find in his new book descriptions of the fine scenery of Denbigh, Radnor, Monmouth, Glamorgan, Brecon, Shropshire, and Herefordshire, interspersed with accounts of their history and archæology, and stories of their inhabitants past and present, with which Mr. Bradley knows so well how to entertain his readers. A feature of the book are the many illustrations from the pen-and-ink drawings of Mr. W. M. Meredith of the natural scenery, the old churches and castles, and the picturesque cottages and villages of the district, the artist and author having been frequent companions in their rambles.

TRADE NOTES AND CHANGES.

THE trustees of the late John Edward Heywood (trading as John Heywood) wish to intimate that the firm of John Heywood has now for family reasons been converted into a private limited liability company as from August 30, 1905, and will be continued under the name of John Heywood, Lim. The business will be conducted under the same management as heretofore.

MR. L. WHITBERG, Hebrew and English bookseller, informs us that he has removed from 5 and 7 Dunmore Street, to a more commodious shop at 21 Main Street, Gorbals, Glasgow.

The National Society's Depository will be removed during the present month, together with the whole of the offices in connection with the work of the Society, to entirely new and more commodious premises situated at 19 Great Peter Street, Westminster. The new building has been constructed with a view to the special requirements of the work of the Society.

To-day, however, the president was inexorable; and there could be no evasion of payment, or subjecting of the host to loss. Indeed, the landlord was too fond of his siller to allow anyone to escape without the quid pro quo; consequently both he and we encountered the heavy censure of the intruders, with an expressed determination on their part never to visit the inn again. How far that might affect the landlord was not our business, for us it was a source of consolation; and he, as well as other keepers of commercial houses, would increase both their comfort and finances by preventing, as far as possible, similar occurrences. Men may be justified in economising time and money; but they have no right to expect to be put in possession of a large amount of comfort for a very small outlay, or to participate in the expensive provisions of a commercial room without duly contributing to the cost. Indeed, few men feel comfortable there who are strangers to its members and its customs. Not only are inconvenience and unpleasantness too frequently caused by the intrusion of strangers, but questions touching the interest of their very neighbours, or perhaps intimate friends, may chance to be introduced, and the worst results may ensue. I would therefore recommend any man who only occasionally leaves home, and who may be desirous, from economical or other motives, to avoid the expense of his dinner and pint of wine at the regular ordinary, to dine alone in private; ordering what he pleases when he pleases, allowing his pleasure, convenience, circumstances, health, and conscience to dictate the quantum he may eat and drink, as well as the amount of his expenditure to remunerate the landlord for the outlay and trouble incurred in his provision.

A WAITRESS AT AN HOTEL.

The dependants at hotels are, to-night, from having a capital specimen before me, vividly presented to my observation; as they are endless in their variety, and in some instances remarkable samples of mortality, they will not, I feel assured, prove an uninteresting theme for speculation.

Various are the opinions offered, and frequently is the subject canvassed, respecting the advantage and superiority of women over men as waiters, and vice versa; but I think that, after all the pros and cons, women are entitled to the preference. When women understand their business, and are not spoiled by an undue familiarity—which is usually, however, the consequence of a liberty given by those upon whom they practise it—they are more congenial to our taste, more homelike and agreeable in their manners, more consonant to the feelings of mankind generally than men-waiters. The willing inclination of the cheerful dispenser of creature-comforts here, without partiality or favouritism, who is even while I write observant of my wants—attempting to furnish, without waiting to be asked for, all the little additions to a repast which, although not costly, are not the less acceptable, and from the spirit in which they are provided are always certain of a proper appreciation—is very grateful. I have often wondered how men can at times so far forget themselves as to give utterance to hasty and petulant remarks, to offensive language, to a bearing of austerity and harshness towards this almost (because the parties dare not reply) helpless and mostly deserving class of industrious servitors. This, indeed, is more a subject of regret than of gratulation, though some may seem to pride themselves upon an almost momentary exhibition of their superiority and importance; especially as, without descending to an equality, orders may so be given, wishes or desires may be so expressed, and commands be so pleasantly delivered, as to convey a feeling of pleasure to the respectful and submissive attendant, alleviating in some measure the painful consideration of dependence which they who serve, feeling their inferiority of position, cannot altogether divest themselves of. Certain it is, that a man will always, by suavity and forbearance, experience more satisfactory attention, and command a more obedient regard, than by an incessantly irritable and discontented practice of finding fault. Any woman who can for years, early and late, stationarily and steadily pursue the arduous duty of a waitress, at a well frequented hotel, has more than a few hardships to contend with, and slight and rare opportunities of enjoyment beyond the scene of her labours. She in fact lives daily in subjection, and at the discretion of the various, ever-changing, unceasing diversity of characters which occupy the commercial room; men who embody every variety of temperament, disposition, intelligence, and ignorance, with all the strange and unaccountable biases which go to make up the motley group of human peculiarity, not unfrequently excited and carried beyond itself, by disappointment, chagrin, or perhaps excessive indulgence. Women in this capacity are often compelled to listen to uncalled-for reproach, and bound to be respectfully attentive, while writhing under a weight of unmerited censure.

'FRENCH NEWS FROM TRAFALGAR!'

THE little article headed as above in last week's P.C. should have been 'Fresh News from Trafalgar!' The printer altered it to 'French' thinking it was a mistake; but news from an English eye-witness never having before been published may fairly be called fresh, any way it was not French.

Letters to the Editor

THE TIMES BOOK SCHEME.

SIR,—One is amazed to find Mr. MacLehose occupying two columns of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR in seriously discussing the Times Book Scheme. Your editorial article which called forth Mr. MacLehose's letter was doubtless the outcome of a visit from some suave individual who sought an interview with you on behalf of the promoters of the Times Book Scheme. This person, one can imagine, suggested to you in a sweetly reproachful sort of way that the aim of the promoters was being misunderstood.

'Injure the booksellers! Imperil the net book system arrangement! No such thing, my dear sir. You forget we have signed the net book agreement, and that we only allow 25 per cent. on subject books. You misunderstand us; you do us a wrong. We do not sell new books at special discount prices Before a book is qualified for what we call "Class B" it must have made twelve journeys and been dropped once into a lady's bath. Then, but not till then, we sacrifice it. Now, my dear sir, you see the distinction between Class A and Class B, don't you? A is taken out by a subscriber, but it must be returned after having been through the bath to be re-christened B before that subscriber can purchase it on our special terms.'

But Mr. MacLehose is not satisfied, and your editorial note appended suggests that your mind also is 'clouded with a doubt'—the suave individual would not do anything wrong, but you are not so sure about the staff. 'What is to prevent the staff doing wrong at times, with the best intention to adhere to agreements with the publishers?' What, indeed? How can they distinguish between A and B if the one class of book is 'virtually as good as the other'?

Everyone knows perfectly well what a legitimate secondhand book trade is. It is dealing in books which have been previously bought and sold. Everyone knows equally well what the sale of surplus library books means. It is a job sale of books bearing the label and marks of a circulating library, books which subscribers have paid for the use of. They are not usually guaranteed 'fresh and perfectly clean,' 'virtually as good as new,' and they are not classed as 'books of this coming year, which you may have at half-price 'after you have read them.' For the use of Mr. MacLehose's Library, Mudie's, Smith's, or any other library a subscriber has to pay an annual subscription, but no subscription is asked for the use of the Times Library. How is it, then, that the Times, deriving no revenue from subscriptions, can sell these books at from 50 per cent. to 70 per cent. below the ordinary price, below the price, that is, at which they themselves buy them. It does not matter a jot whether the books are new or have been in circulation for ten years: a loss is incurred on every book purchased for the library, even though it is eventually sold because the Times has no revenue from subscriptions to compensate them for selling under cost price. The greater the number of books bought for this library the heavier the loss. Well, now, what compensates the Times for this loss? Surely not the profit derived from its trade in new books. If books 'virtually as good as new' can be had at these sweeping reductions, what proportion of the customers of the Times bookshop may be expected to pay full price for genuine new copies? Granted that the Times develops one of the best businesses in London in new books, does anyone dream that the profit realised from such a business will meet the expenditure of stocking, organising, and carrying on a huge free circulating library—a library with no income from subscriptions? The working expenses alone of this costly elaborate organisation must far exceed the profits of any ordinary book shop dealing in new books.

[*] In 1847 Joseph Masters, of Aldersgate Street London, published for the author, Throne Crick, of Leicester, a little work entitled 'Sketches from the Diary of a Commercial Traveller,' from which we give some extracts.—ED. P C.

What fund provides for this enormous expenditure? The answer, in the words of the Times, is this: 'The object of the scheme is spending money, not making it.' Of course this spending is not a non-productive expenditure. It is intended to be productive. The harvest is to be an increased circulation of the Times; and an increased revenue from additional advertisements (stipulated for from the publishers) is to compensate the Times newspaper for the loss incurred in carrying on the Times bookshop.

That, Sir, is how the matter stands. That is why I affirm that the gravest error on the part of publisher and bookseller is to discuss this book scheme at all. It is not a matter for discussion, but one for prompt and decisive action. The Times proclaims in its largest type that the book scheme is an advertisement designed solely to increase its circulation. It is a gamble in advertising—a gamble, pure and simple. Every man is free to use his own advertising methods, no one disputes that if it is legitimate advertising; but—and this is the crux of the whole thing—the attempt to supplant the booksellers by underselling and the subscription library by a free library is part and parcel of the 'Times' scheme of advertising. The subscriber to the Times does well to accept the generous offer made to him; but the publisher? the bookseller? Which of them is being made the cat's-paw of the Times? Not the bookseller—he cannot help himself. The publisher is the cat's-paw. Does the publisher recognise this? Is he agreeable to sit still and see the Times undersell and supplant the bookseller under the conditions specified? No pretence is made by the Times to carry on a bona-fide bookselling or library business for profit. The concern is an admitted advertising speculation. A book business is carried on at a great loss solely to promote an entirely different kind of business which is neither a bookselling one nor a circulating library one.

It is the publishers who permit the game; it is the publishers who can stop it. There is no need of discussion. It is simply a question for the publishers' yea or nay.

I am, &c.,
FAIR PLAY.

[We believe, as we said last week, the division into classes A, B, and C, according to condition, is the dangerous part of the Times scheme. We are told the books are not to be marked or labelled in any way, so that the division into classes is purely arbitrary, and, in plain English, must be a farce where great numbers of books are constantly coming in and going out. Some people think the Times scheme will not succeed because people who do not want the Times will not buy it to get the Book Club advantages; but they forget that probably thousands of people who have always paid threepence for their Times will take advantage of the offer. The Times cannot refuse to take them, although one fails to see how giving old subscribers all these library and book-buying facilities is to benefit the Times. It looks as if the benefit must come out of the bookselling part of the business—that on which the Times says it will lose money.—ED.]

SIR,—As an old bookseller, though no longer in the trade, I wish to point out one aspect in the Times Book Scheme to which the publishers should give serious attention. Mr. R. Maclehose says in his letter in your issue of to-day: 'If this new and startling monopoly is to be granted to the Times, it is the most serious blow the system has yet received, and threatens to make the future working of the "net" system almost impossible.' This is quite true, for this, among other reasons, that booksellers will, if this scheme is carried out, be very chary of stocking net books. When the travellers call they are always anxious to make up their orders from catalogue as well as from new publications. No doubt a very large percentage of books that are published become unsaleable after a few months, yet there a great many of both net and non-net books that continue for some years. There are also the reprints of the classics, many of which are net. What bookseller would be likely to stock these when he knows the public can obtain them from the Times at less than he can buy them from the publishers?—I am, yours faithfully,

J. W. M.

Muswell Hill, London, N.:
September 30, 1905.

DEAR SIR,—I should like to follow up Mr. MacLehose's able letter in your last issue, and to support his contention that the Times scheme of bookselling is a serious threat to the net book system.

I do not think we country booksellers have so much to fear—the item of carriage protects us. But it threatens the London trade seriously, and eventually what affects London affects the country. Besides in this we cannot be divided, 'if one member suffer, the other members suffer with it.'

Accepting the facts as we have them before us—and refraining from expressing a natural indignation at what can at mildest only be described as an unwarrantable intrusion, unworthy of the great traditions of the Times—accepting the facts, there seems to be certain principles that ought to be held without compromise:

1. The Publishers ought, one and all, to grant to the Times Book Club precisely the ame terms as are given to the general booksellers in London. There ought to be no 'special terms,' for every such concession places the regular trade at a disadvantage—an unjustifiable disadvantage.

2. The net book agreement must be literally interpreted and rigidly enforced. The danger pointed out by Mr. MacLehouse in the last paragraph but one of his letter is a real one, and must be strenuously guarded against.

3. Publishers must oppose, with courtesy but firmly, the present Class B, and urge its complete withdrawal. It is altogether injurious and is only a wider door to the underseller. Read it: 'Clean and uninjured copies,' 'Virtually as good as new,' 'Condition indicating that they have been in circulation for about a month.' These books are to be offered for sale at 35 per cent. and 20 per cent.—regular and net books respectively. What bookseller is able to tell from its appearance that the book has had 'about a month's use?' And why after a month? Many books are only just making their way during the first month. This paragraph is very wrong. It offers too many loopholes for loose dealing if any man is inclined to go through them.

The Times management states that it is prepared to spend £100,000 on the project in order to double the circulation of their paper. Why spend this great amount in such a way as to hurt and seriously prejudice an honourable business? Bookselling at best is one of the least remunerative of businesses, and cannot bear this additional strain.

The one thing that must be maintained and strenuously fought for is the integrity of the net book; that at least, as much more as can reasonably be obtained. The way we have travelled to gain our present position has been toilsome, and not without much difficulty. We must not be turned back now by any force and combination, however wealthy. Now, if ever, is the opportunity for strong united co-operation of the two Trade Associations. The Publishers must work heartily and frankly with the Booksellers, and the Booksellers as heartily and frankly with the Publishers.

I have confidence that both will see the greatness of the issues which depend upon their decisions just now.

Yours truly,
HENRY B. SAXTON.

King Street, Nottingham.

DEAR SIR,—In reference to your article on the Times book scheme in your last issue, there are several points, I think, upon which you are not correct. You say: 'Each new book as it goes out is placed in Class A, &c., &c. It must be sent back to the Times before its class can be changed, which will not be done so long as it is in good condition; nor even if soiled, provided there is still a demand for it from readers.'

This is quite different from the particulars given in the Times prospectus. Page 3, last paragraph, states: 'You can keep any book that you wish to buy after you have read it.' According to this, a newly published net book can be obtained from the Times Library, kept for a month, and then charged to a subscriber's account less 20 per cent. discount. This being so, it seems to me there is nothing whatever to prevent any bookseller supplying a customer with a net book on approval, and in a month's time selling it to him at a discount of 20 per cent.

And after reading the second paragraph on page 22 of the Times prospectus, you will, I think, find it presents the case very differently to the way it is referred to in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of your article. When a subscriber wishes to buy a book he is quite at liberty to do so, notwithstanding that the book may still be in demand (page 22, second paragraph).

It seems a strange thing that the publishers should have given their assent to such a scheme, which will most assuredly prove fatal to the net system.

I am, yours faithfully,
A. L. B.

[We understand that the Times has signed the Net Book agreement, and we have not the least doubt of its intention to abide by it loyally. What we are not so sure of is — as we have said elsewhere— whether it will be possible for the Times to work its own scheme within the lines of the net agreement. That remains to be seen; if it cannot do so, doubtless it will alter its rules and put a label on books it loans, as other libraries do.—Ed.]

Notices of Books

From Messrs. S. C. Brown, Langham & Co., Ltd.—'Lieut. Gullivar Jones: his Vacation,' by Edwin L. Arnold. There are few readers' we imagine, who do not remember that marvellous piece of carpet mentioned in the 'Arabian Nights' upon which the owner had only to plant himself and express a wish to be carried anywhere, even to the other end of the world, and it was done. Upon a similar foundation is Mr. Arnold's story constructed. How the wondrous rug comes into the hero's possession it boots not to say (he is an American, by the way, and a sailorman), but once there he accidentally stands upon it and expresses a desire to be in the planet Mars, and hey presto! it immediately curls itself around him, takes him up with no very gentle motion, wheels once round the room, and dashes with its burden through the open window into space. Arrived—or, more truthfully speaking, shot down—on the planet Mars, Lieut. Gullivar Jones's extraordinary experiences at once begin, and of love and adventure he has more than would satiate a thousand ordinary men. Matters culminate in a gorgeous set-piece, replete with the most enthralling effects, in which all the characters take part; and then, just in the nick of time, the carpet comes into evidence again; the gallant, truth-loving Gullivar takes his stand on it; 'I wish I were back in New York' he breathlessly cries; there is a rushing, swerving motion, and behold! he has his desire. It is a very remarkable story, likely to keep the imaginative reader spell-bound.

From the Cambridge University Press.—'Tables and Constants to Four Figures for Use in Technical, Physical, and Nautical Computations, and adapted to the Requirements of Junior Mathematical Students,' compiled by William Hall. A rather lengthy title fully indicates the character of this volume. The tables owe their original inception to a comparison of Callet, Bremiker, and Vega; while other authorities consulted in their preparation are Inman, Hannyngton, and Professor Bottomley. The object the author has had in view is to provide a suitable introduction to other and larger collections of tables which shall also serve as a handbook for use in technical and physical calculations where four-figure accuracy is sufficient. For this purpose we can cordially recommend the work.

From the same.—'Elementary Arabic: a Grammar,' by Frederic du Pre Thornton, being an abridgment of Wright's Arabic Grammar, to which it will serve as a Table of Contents,' edited by Reynold A. Nicholson, M.A. Mr. Thornton, whose death occurred in 1903, was an accomplished Arabic scholar. His life had been largely spent in the East, and his entire sympathies were bound up with a study of the language. During his life he planned a series of Arabic manuals of which he left two volumes already printed and in private circulation, viz. the present abridgment of Wright's Grammar and a First Reading Book. His scheme, we are glad to find, is now to be carried out in its entirety, and the task of editing and completing the series has been entrusted to an expert hand in Mr. Nicholson. That the library (which will consist of four or possibly five volumes) will prove a valuable aid in the acquirement of the Arabic language this opening instalment affords convincing testimony.

From the same.—'The Elements of English Grammar,' by Alfred S. West, M.A. Of the useful character of this volume no more powerful evidence could be adduced than that it has now reached an eighty-fifth thousand. A very slight acquaintance with its pages will convince the student that he is in the hands of a thorough master of the subject, and one whose ruling in the matter of nouns, adjectives, pronouns, verbs, adverbs, prepositions, and so forth may confidently be relied upon. As the end of the volume Mr. West proffers some very useful advice on the subject of Essay Writing, and contrasts with excellent judgment the different styles. As an amusing example of 'Preciosity,' so prominent in present day literature, he quotes the following criticism on an eminent novelist of a past generation: 'Hers was an apocalyptic gift of psychological fiction, free from the fetters of convention, deaf to the resonant rotundity of rule, ignoring the clamant importunity of whatever is banal, and depicting with curious felicity all that is bizarre and recherché in human personality.' These be precious words indeed, and yet, as Mr. West points out, so far as they mean anything at all they mean merely this, that the said authoress possessed insight into character, handled her materials in a way of her own, and had a happy knack of describing odd people!

From Messrs. James Clarke & Co.—'The Rosebud Annual.' With each yearly issue this volume seems to become more fascinating, and youngsters would indeed be disappointed if they were deprived of their highly esteemed friend. The success of the work is in a large measure due to a just appreciation on the part of its conductors of what little folk like in their reading, and to a plentiful supply of effective and comical illustrations. Of these in the present volume there are nearly two hundred, including several in colour.

From the same.—'Louis Wain's Animal Show, with Stories.' The pictures in this volume are thoroughly calculated to catch the attention of young people, being all of animals whose salient points and diverting antics are broadly depicted. Quiet humour is lost upon a child, and therefore Mr. Wain wisely eschews this form of treatment, though unconsciously it makes itself felt. As for the stories, told in prose and verse, they are just what such narratives should be, considering the nature of the audience. But it is upon the illustrations that the success of the production will mainly depend, and in this respect it is more than ordinarily well equipped.

From Messrs. Greening & Co., Ltd.—'Dorothy Raeburn,' by Reginald Turner. There is scarcely the sprightliness and vivacity in this story that previous experience has led us to expect from Mr. Turner yet after a quiet, modest fashion it is undeniably interesting. Two young men—the one good looking but empty-headed, the other plain but of a thoughtful, sterling disposition—are brought into close intimacy during their boyhood with a beautiful girl. Of course it ends in their both falling in love with her, but, the unattractive admirer being too diffident to put the all-important question, his rival carries off the prize. The maiden then discovers she has decided against her heart's dictates, and trouble looms largely in the future. Happily this is averted, but how we are not disposed to reveal. Perhaps even a more powerful element of interest in the story than Dorothy Raeburn's love entanglements is the mystery overhanging her mother's past, and for the unfolding of this many readers will be content to pursue their investigations to the close.

From Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.—'A World without a Child: a Story for Women and for Men,' by Coulson Kernahan. We have always recognised in Mr. Kernahan the power of a strongly imaginative mind, with a gift of melodious, poetic expression vouchsafed to few writers; but in this, his latest booklet, we fear he has allowed his love of high-sounding sentences to carry him too far. They certainly produce a pleasurable sensuous effect, such as would be wrought on a delicate, emotional nature by beautiful, sad music; but, candidly, when we come to look for the sense that should underlie this fine arrangement of words we are often hard pressed to find it. Perhaps the worst instances of this exalted, artificial style are observable in the Preface; when the author comes to his work proper he seems to determine himself to greater clearness. But even here many of his thoughts will not bear analysis; they are concealed amid a profusion of sweet-sounding words, stripped of which they dwindle to nothingness. This criticism, however, in large measure refers only to matters of detail, and with the general conception and purport of the volume much sympathy may be expressed. In its object of showing the influence of the child, the ultimate fate that overwhelms women who in their love of the world and its pleasures lose all regard for motherhood, the book teaches a noble lesson very beautifully worded.

From the same.—'White Fire,' by John Oxenham, with sixteen illustrations by G. Grenville Manton. Possibly the opening chapters of Mr. Oxenham's story may seem a little discouraging, but we would strongly advise perseverance, since once readers have got into the swing of the narrative there will be little question of their drawing back. The scenes of the novel are for the most part laid in a group of the South Sea Islands, whither Kenneth Blair and his young wife, ardent workers in the missionary cause, have proceeded with a view to improving the condition, moral and physical, of the natives. There is nothing of the sickly sentimentalist about Kenneth Blair. He is a determined, resolute man, who takes with him the power (in the shape of a well-equipped schooner, a numerous crew armed with Winchesters, a Maxim, and a Long Tom, to say nothing of other warlike accessories) of protecting the poor Islanders from their enemies, the rascally kidnappers, and thus gaining their confidence. Quite early in his career he is enabled to rescue a complete shipload of wretched natives who are being conveyed away into slavery, and from this event many exciting consequences proceed, which are certain to be highly relished by young readers. A fine glow of heroism pervades the story, and this is much enhanced by the nobility of the cause which Blair and his followers espouse.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co., Ltd.—'The Toll of the Bush,' by William Satchell. Mr. Satchell takes up the story of life in New Zealand. Here two brothers are partners in a farm. The elder, educated in England, has joined his brother at a later date and would in the light of subsequent events seem to have had a 'past' in the old country. The real particulars in regard to this come into the possession of the Rev. Fletcher, a proselytising clergyman of the fanatical type, who yields to the temptation of withholding them in order to advance his interests with a beautiful girl for whose good graces he and the elder brother are rivals. The cleric succeeds, but on the day of her wedding the heroine discovers the true state of affairs and in her horror of the consummation of the ceremony escapes from the house into the bush. Here, as it happens, a fire is raging, and ere being joined very providentially by her own true lover, the pair have a particularly exciting time of it, being only rescued at the last moment. But all comes right in the long run—bless these dear romanticists!—and, the Rev. Fletcher conveniently dying, no opposition is offered to the union of his widow with the real object of her affections. There are some bright threads of humour interwoven with the narrative through the presence of a native, one Pine, whose sayings and doings will often provoke laughter; and the story in other directions shows an agreeable grasp of character.

From Messrs. George Newnes, Ltd.—'Drawings of John M. Swan, R.A.' Mr. A. L. Baldry pays a high tribute to the unconventionality and merit of Mr. Swan in this volume of the 'Modern Master Draughtsmen' series, but not more so, we believe, than his subject deserves. Of the breadth of the artist's execution and the wealth of insight shown in his calling the included drawings, which are mainly rough studies rather than finished works, convey a very adequate impression. These drawings are for the most part effectively reproduced, and the entire volume is one that will have great interest for the art student.

From Messrs. George Philip & Son, Ltd.—'School Gardening,' by W. E. Watkins and Arthur Sowman. Nature study as a branch of the school curriculum has of late years attracted an increasing amount of attention, and it is to this fact and the want of a book suggesting a systematic method of carrying out the most practical and useful way of dealing with the subject through the medium of school gardening that the preparation of Messrs. Watkins and Sowman's manual is due. It has been written, the authors point out, to describe fully a year's cultivation of a school garden, with all the processes needed in the cultivation of the various flowers, vegetables, and fruit trees possible in such an area. Some account of the common insect pests and fungoid diseases with which the gardener has to strive is also afforded, and the remedies for their extermination or prevention are indicated. Numerous illustrations greatly add to the value of the volume.

From Sir Isaac Pitman & Sons, Ltd.—'Guide to Commercial Correspondence and Business Composition,' by William Jayne Weston, M.A. Mr. Weston's volume is designed for the use of youths who are intended for a commercial career or have actually entered upon business life. The author in his Preface is perhaps a little inclined to undervalue formality in commercial correspondence; far better for the clerk to follow stereotyped lines where safety lies than to launch out into his own phraseology and commit grievous errors allowing of business encroachments. But the book in most respects is full of excellent advice, and by following its guidance the tiro in commercial work can scarcely do wrong.

From the Religious Tract Society.—'The Psalms: their Spiritual Teaching,' by the Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D. Vol. 1 Psalms I.–XLI. The Chief Davidic Psalms. Candidly confessing that no part of Scripture has probably been so much commented on as the Psalter, the author urges as a reason for his temerity in contributing yet another work to the subject that, with the exception of Spurgeon's huge work, there is a complete absence of a devotional commentary on evangelical lines. There are devotional commentaries, admirably done in their way, but they are chiefly on High Church lines. To the production of a work for which there is a distinct want he therefore devotes himself, and his present volume, he hopes, may be followed shortly by a second and third. In the limited space at our disposal it must suffice to say that Dr. Cumming has written a book that should elicit admiration and respect from every supporter of religion, no matter what his own particular grade of opinion may be, and that it should powerfully contribute to a right understanding of the inner meanings of the Psalter, besides proving an invaluable aid to those who are themselves teachers.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF AUTHORS, TITLES, AND SUBJECTS OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

The Publishers' Circular

A GERMAN BOSWELL.[*]

In these days of torrents of reprints of well-known books it is a relief to turn to something old which is new. If some English publisher were fortunate enough to discover the material for a new book made up of unpublished correspondence of Boswell with Johnson and other well-known people, we should all be impatiently looking for it. In Germany just such an unexpected discovery of old literary treasure has been made, and is creating great interest among the innumerable admirers of Goethe. In his old age the great German poet loved to flatter and be flattered by the budding poets, or would-be poets, of his country. Chief of these admirers was J. P. Eckermann, whose 'Conversations with Goethe' entitle him to be called the German Boswell, who, it seems, left a large correspondence, now for the first time being published, Vol. 1, edited by M. F. Tewes, having appeared with the imprint of G. Reimer, of Berlin.

Doubtless some English publisher has already considered the question of publishing a translation of this work—it requires a good deal of consideration before undertaking to publish a translation of a book of this kind in this country—and if anything eventually appears it will probably be a selection in one volume of such letters as have interest for other than German readers. M. T. de Wyzewa, who does so admirably those Revues étrangères in the Revue des Deux Mondes, gives us a charming article entitled 'A Victim of Goethe,' extracted from the correspondence of Eckermann with Jeannne Bertram. Jeane-Pierre Eckermann, born in a Hannoverian village in 1792, after being in turn shepherd, soldier, draughtsman, clerk, entered the University of Göttingen in 1821. At this time he was engaged to be married to Jeanne Bertram, a charming young girl some nine years his junior, who was destined to be the 'Victim of Goethe.' Eckermann, whose tastes were of a literary and poetical character, had been wisely persuaded by his sweetheart to take up law as a profession, she pointing out to him that it need not interfere with the making of verse and would much sooner enable them to get married, as they both so ardently wished to do. Unfortunately for Eckermann—or perhaps we ought to say for poor Jeanne, who was so wrapped up in him—on August 25, 1822, he sent Goethe a little collection of his poems, and on October 2 received one of those banal and unrestrained eulogies which the old poet was in the habit of showering on his young confrères. Eckermann, blinded by the setting sun of Weimar, forsook everything, fled there, and for the remainder of Goethe's life, some ten years, gave almost his whole time and certainly all his devotion to the poet, gratuitously. Meantime, poor Jeanne, rejoicing at first with her lover at Goethe's complaisance, begins to fret at the delay, year after year passes, and in place of a visit from her Jean she gets a bust of Goethe, who found Eckermann so useful that whenever the latter referred to his contemplated marriage he counselléd delay. At last Jeanne, as M. de Wyzewa, doubtless correctly, surmises, must have wished to smash the bust of the wicked old man into a thousand pieces. After waiting ten years she tells him plainly, in a charming letter full of good sense, that she would like to know what he is doing; she thinks it is time that he let Goethe wait a little and produced something good himself. 'For I know,' she adds, 'that it is he who distracts you with his invitations and the work he imposes on you. By this time you have had honours enough at Weimar, and I should not be sorry if your reputation extended beyond that city. But if you continue to work for Goethe you will always be where you are, and I shall have to conclude that your love for me is not strong enough to make you undertake anything. Goethe in return for all your services pays you only with empty honours; he does not think of me, nor of your future happiness. I have often been told at Lunebourg that Goethe keeps young poets near him in this way, uses them for his own purposes, and never gives them any recompense.' This 'tragi-comédie,' as M. de Wyzewa calls it, went on for a further four years, and in another letter of gentle remonstrance she says: 'Goethe is a man who promises much without ever keeping his promises. If you had continued to study law, you would have made a position long ago. I blame myself much now for not having insisted more than I did formerly on your finishing your studies. . . . People ask me when I am to be married, and what can I say? To hear oneself questioned for twelve or thirteen years about a marriage which seems to be put off to eternity is becoming maddening.' However, they did get married at last, Goethe consenting on condition that it was never mentioned. But poor devoted Jeanne, exhausted by the long years of hope deferred, died soon after her marriage, too weak to withstand the strain of childbirth.

Her letters prove her to have been as sweet and charming as she was devoted to her lover. One resents the fate which made her a sacrifice to the 'Olympian indifference' of Goethe; and yet if she had married earlier the world would have lost so much that is interesting about Goethe; the selfish world says charming and loving women are not rare, genius is.

Duval's 'Artistic Anatomy' has for many years been well known as an explicit and reliable text-book for artists and art students in their studies of human anatomy in relation to art. In its essentials the work of M. Duval still maintains its position, but the advance of surgical knowledge has necessitated a revision of its more technical details. Messrs. Cassell & Co., the publishers, entrusted this work to Professor A. Melville Paterson, the Derby Professor of Anatomy in the University of Liverpool, and the result is an entirely new edition of the book, which is about to make it appearance. Professor Paterson has rewritten much of the matter and added much that is new. The illustrations, too, have been amplified and revised under the Professor's supervision, so that the new volume may be regarded as the latest work upon the important question of anatomy in the service of art.

'The Tower of Siloam' is the title of a new novel by Mrs. Henry Graham which is published by Mr. Alston Rivers.

Messrs. Anthony Treherne & Co. are publishing, about the 17th inst. 'Queer Things about Sicily' by Douglas Sladen and Norma Lorimer. This work differs widely from Mr. Sladen's other books on 'The Islands of the Sun.' Not only has it the advantage of a number of chapters by Miss Lorimer, author of 'By the Waters of Sicily' &c., but in this book Mr. Sladen has described Sicily from an entirely fresh standpoint. He shows how it strikes the ordinary traveller. The work is to be fully illustrated.

In 'The Life of Sir Aglovale de Galis' (Methuen) Miss Clemence Housman 'brings into full light from the scant records of Malory the history of the most despised of King Arthur's knights. His fall from knighthood, his strenuous attempts to retrieve his honour, with his subsequent failure and backslidings, occupy the first half of the book. In the second, delivered from himself, he bows to adverse judgment, does nobly in obscure ways, and so comes to his end without renown.'

Messrs. Sands & Company, London, have in the press a novel by a new writer which they will publish during this month, entitled 'Maud Irving,' from the pen of Miss E. H. Boyd.

Mr. George East will bring out the second year's issue of 'The Collector's Annual' through Mr. Elliot Stock immediately. It will contain, as did the former volume, a record for the year of the chief sales of china, pictures, engravings, antique furniture, old silver and plate, and other objects of art.

Additional volumes are being rapidly added to the series of Sixpenny 'Cameo Classics.' The latest new titles are 'Oliver Twist,' 'The Beauties of Robert Burns,' Carlyle's 'Heroes and Hero Worship,' and 'The Scarlet Letter.' The publishers of this popular series—the 'Library Press'—have just issued an edition of Dickens's 'Christmas Carol,' with colour pictures by Charles Pears, forming Volume 2 of their new 'Adelphi Library'; Volume 3 will be "The Ingoldsby Legends," illustrated in colour by S. H. Sime.

The new volume of 'Book Prices Current' (Vol. XIX.) will be published immediately by Mr. Elliot Stock. This year's issue will be found notable as containing an unusually large number of scarce and valuable books, as compared with recent years, which have been noteworthy for large sales rather than intrinsically valuable ones.

The aim of Dr. Walter Lock's book, 'The Bible and Christian Life,' is to show the permanent claim of the Bible to be an inspired book and a guide to Life; with this purpose the Warden of Keble College has tried to show what the Bible teaches us as to the nature of its own inspiration, what is its attitude to Gentile religions, what are the true methods for its study, and what is the contribution of several of its books to that end. Messrs. Methuen will publish the book shortly.

All who are interested in the blind should send to the editor of the Braille Weekly, a sixteen-page penny weekly newspaper for the blind, published at 24 St. Giles Street, Edinburgh, for a prospectus of it.

Our monthly contemporary the Studio is a credit to the country, and fortunately it has a very large circulation abroad, as well as at home.

A romance by Gabriel Tarde which will be published by Messrs. Duckworth & Co. immediately, under the title of 'Underground Man,' will have a Preface by Mr. H. G. Wells, and it describes another of those Utopias which are exampled in Mr. Wells's books.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. announce yet another autumn book dealing with a part of Italy. This is entitled 'The Casentino and its Story,' and it is written by Miss Ella Noyes, author of 'Ferrara' in the 'Mediæval Towns' series, and illustrated by the author's sister, Miss Dora Noyes. There are twenty-five coloured and a great number of line illustrations, which not only depict the singular beauty of the scenery in the Valley of the Arno but also the picturesque denizens of that most romantic tract of Italy. Saint Francis and La Verna, Saint Romauld and the Camaldoli, and Dante and the splendours of the Renaissance, are all intimately bound up with the Casentino.

It is some time since Mrs. Henry Fawcett produced her last book, a consideration which lends additional interest to the announcement of a new volume from her pen to be published shortly by Messrs. Cassell & Co. under the title of 'Five Famous French Women.' The work will contain numerous illustrations. The famous French women whom the author has selected are Joan of Arc; Renée, Duchess of Ferara, daughter of Louis XII.; Louise of Savoy, mother of Francis I.; Margaret of Angoulême, sister of Francis I.; and Jeanne d'Albert, the fearless Queen of Navarre.

The new novel by the author of 'John Westacott' will be issued by Messrs. Chapman & Hall during October. It deals with Oxford undergraduate life, and the scene shifts from the Isis to the Nile, from Oxford to Cornwall and Egypt, all ground familiar to Mr. James Baker, the author.

Mr. George Allen has nearly ready a third edition of 'Ionica,' a volume of poetry by William Cory, edited, with Biographical Introduction, by Arthur C. Benson, Fellow of Magdalene College, Cambridge.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. will publish immediately a book on the minor arts by Mr. Frank G. Sandford, entitled 'The Art Crafts for Beginners.' The volume is intended for those who feel the need of some art expressions, but who cannot attend an art school, and to those who wish to follow the art of a craftsman. The subjects dealt with are design, wood working, pyrography, sheet metal work, bookbinding, simple pottery, basket work and bead work. The book will contain over 200 working designs and photographs.

Mr. Edward Arnold has just published the concluding volume of Sir Horace Rumbold's reminiscences. These 'Final Recollections of a Diplomatist' cover the period from the year 1885, when he was Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Greece, to his retirement from the Diplomatic Service in 1900; and, from their dealing with events still fresh in the memory of every reader, will probably be found to surpass in interest even the previous volumes of the author's memoirs.

Messrs. C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd., send us a copy of the Sixpenny Centenary Edition of Mr. Douglas Sladen's novel, 'The Admiral: the Love-Story of Lord Nelson and Lady Hamilton,' which is now in its fifty-second thousand. The cover is specially interesting. The figure of Nelson is taken from an extremely rare colour print of Nelson, published by Tegg in 1807, and pronounced by some people to be the work of Rowlandson. There is no copy in the South Kensington Museum, and the copy in the British Museum is only half-coloured. There is not even a copy among the Nelson portraits at Earl's Court.

In Messrs. Methuen's Standard Library, Volume 4 of Gibbon's 'Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire' was published on October 5. The work will be completed in seven volumes.

In view of various statements which have appeared from time to time as to the disposition of the publishing business of Mr. Grant Richards, we are now in a position to state definitely that the business has been purchased by Mr. Alexander Moring. By arrangement Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press Warehouse, takes over the 'World's Classics,' the 'Boys' Classics,' and the 'Parsons' Handbook' Series. With these exceptions, the publications of Mr. Grant Richards' list will be issued in future by Messrs. Alexander Moring, Ltd. (the De La More Press, 32 George Street, Hanover Square), the publishers of the popular series, the 'King's Classics.'

Dr. Nansen has written an interesting prefatory note to Lieut. Albert B. Armitage's book on the recent national Antarctic Expedition—'Two Years in the Antarctic'—which Mr. Edward Arnold will publish on October 19.

Several new novels were published by Mr. Edward Arnold last Thursday, including 'A Trombone and a Star,' by C. T. Podmore, author of 'A Cynic's Conscience'; 'A Flood Tide,' by Mary A. Debenham; and two stories in one volume—'The Brown House' and 'Cordelia,' by Margaret Booth, who, it is interesting to note, is a daughter of Mr. Charles Booth, the well-known author of 'Life and Labour of the People in London.'

Mrs. Alfred Sidgwick has written a new novel, 'The Professor's Legacy,' which Mr. Edward Arnold will publish on Monday, October 16.

Mrs. Alice Braithwaite, of Harrogate, has written a sixpenny (net) brochure entitled 'Plain Dinners: a Help to a Uric-Acid-Free Diet.' It contains some very clear and simple directions for cooking vegetables, &c., suitable for those who suffer from too much uric acid. What we suffer from is advertisements in the evening papers of cures for uric-acid ailments.

Mr. Heinemann will publish 'Medicine and the Public,' by Dr. Squire Sprigge, on the 17th inst. This book will appeal to the public in general as well as to the medical profession, for everybody is concerned in the quality and efficiency of the medical service of this country and in the legislative and social conditions under which that service is rendered. There are chapters on quacks, the miseries of the sick poor, and the poverty of our great hospitals.

Mr. Leighton Leigh has written a book entitled 'Brother East and Brother West,' a search-light on the question of the unemployed. This volume will be published by Mr. Heinemann on the 16th inst., and is said to be the most vigorous and original work on the subject ever written. The writer proposes new and practical remedies for dealing with the questions of the supply and demand of labour.

Another new volume, 'The Complete Poetical Works of William Cowper,' is being added to the Oxford editions of the poets. It has been edited by Mr. H. S. Milford, who presents the text as Cowper printed it, noting for the first time at all fully variant readings. The main body of miscellaneous poems, including those printed by Cowper himself in various editions, is given in chronological order in the Oxford volume; which also contains a chronological table, textual notes by the editor, and a portrait of the poet.

To how few it is given to possess an 'Old Master'! Mr. Mortimer Menpes has recently perfected a process which 'enables him to reproduce, with astonishing fidelity, the rich deep colouring of the Old Masters, in their true values,' and he has arranged with Messrs. Adam & Charles Black to publish a series of monographs containing such reproductions in colours. Mr. C. Lewis Hind will write the letterpress for the first volume, which will deal with 'Rembrandt.'

Mr. Werner Laurie is issuing 'Jungle Trails and Jungle People,' travels, adventures, and observations in the Far East. The book will be of special interest in view of the Prince of Wales's visit to India. The author, Mr. Caspar Whitney, is well known as a sportsman and hunter of big game, and his new book gives an account of his really thrilling experiences in hunting and travelling in the Far East.

Mr. Walter Del Mar has completed his book of travel in the Great Dependency. It is to be called 'India of Today,' and will be published by Messrs. Black. It is the record of a tour undertaken during the winter of 1904–5, which began and ended at Bombay, and extended from Madura, in the south of the Peninsula, to the Khaibar Pass, with excursions into Burma, Assam, and Kashmir. The author's experience shows that most of the noteworthy monuments and scenes in India can be visited in the four months from the middle of November to the middle of March, and that in these winter months Arctic weather may be found in the hills of Northern India.

Mr. Henry Frowde, of the Oxford University Press, has taken over 'The World's Classics,' the popular series in which sixty-five volumes have already appeared, and is making arrangements to add largely to its number. He has also acquired 'The Boys' Classics' and 'The Parson's Handbook' series.

'Where to Live round London' is the title of a useful little book published by the Homeland Association, Ltd., 22 Bride Lane, E.C.

The Librarian of the Leeds Public Free Libraries, in his admirable Annual Report for 1904–5, has an astonishing complaint to make. He says: 'The situation of the library on the top story of the municipal buildings prevents many people from visiting it. So long as the library is thus located its usefulness will be restricted.' All the same we are glad to see that the library is used, as nearly a million and a-half books were in demand last year—the largest issue in the history of the library. The new Report contains illustrations of the York Road branch library opened in October 1904, and already doing very good work.

In connection with the Nelson Centenary Mr. Henry Frowde will publish, on Tuesday next, a popular little book entitled 'Words and Deeds of Nelson,' by W. M. C., who has attempted to present in brief compass what is most characteristic. The letterpress will be illustrated.

'BOOK AUCTION RECORDS,' VOL. II.*

(Formerly known as 'Sale Records.')

This is 'A Priced and Annotated Record of London Book Auctions,' edited by Frank Karslake. We confess that the unfortunate career of 'Sale Records,' under which title we understand 'Book Auction Records' first appeared, made us a little chary of giving space to notice this work when it was appearing in parts. Now that the volume is complete, and we have Mr. Karslake's assurance that all orders can be promptly executed, we are glad to call attention to what is certainly a most useful and valuable work—one which will be found simply invaluable to those who wish to know the prices obtained for books sold at auction between October 1, 1904, and September 30, 1905, embracing nearly 16,000 records. The work extends to 672 pages, of which nearly 100 are devoted to an index to the separate items. As far as we have been able to test it, it appears to have been admirably done.

NORTHERN BRANCH OF THE ASSOCIATED BOOKSELLERS. ANNUAL MEETING.

The Net Book System.

The annual meeting of the Northern Branch of the Associated Booksellers of Great Britain and Ireland was held at the Scarisbrick Hotel, Southport, on Monday, October 9. There was a representative gathering, amongst those present being Mr. Watson (Leeds), Mr. Lupton (Burnley), Mr. Brady (Manchester), Mr. Sampson (York), Mr. Hughes (Manchester), Mr. Philip (Liverpool), Mr. Young (Liverpool), Mr. Walker (Leeds), Mr. Golder (Chester), Mr. Smith (Bury), Mr. Wrigley (Lancaster), Mr. Bates (Liverpool), Mr. Platt (Wigan), Mr. Mortimer, Mr. Aldam, Mr. Pearson, and Mr. King (Halifax).

The chair was occupied by Mr. Thomas Watson, of Leeds, Chairman of the Northern Section.

After the more formal proceedings of the meeting had been disposed of, the Secretary read the report, which referred to items of interest and the mission work done by the Chairman and Secretary in seeking to increase the membership, and asking for continued support on the part of the trade.

In moving the adoption of the report the Chairman said: The position I hold to-day is a somewhat anomalous one—presiding over a meeting of Booksellers three months after I have retired from the business. I am not thinking of my own case when I say it was a wise step when, at the gathering of the Associated Booksellers in Edinburgh, we amended our rule of membership and made it broad enough to embrace those who were retired Booksellers. By so doing we were enabled to retain the magnificent services of Mr. Alderman Keay, our President, who has rendered such conspicuous service to the whole bookselling community of the three kingdoms.

Referring to myself, may I say that my retirement does not mean an absolute loss of interest in the work of this society? I was present and took part in its formation, and I have been greatly interested in its growth and success all through. I am sometimes astonished at the supineness manifested by important members of the trade when I consider the great work it has already achieved. We are all greatly indebted to it for the improved condition of things. Not ten years ago the net scheme was launched after much difficulty and opposition, and we have all derived financial benefit from it. I am strongly of the opinion, were we to allow it to be destroyed it would be a terrible disaster, and it is a question whether the Bookseller would then be able to exist. What does. that mean? It means a reduced number of outlets for the productions of the publishers It is therefore to the mutual interest of both Publisher and Bookseller that the arrangement should be preserved in its integrity. United we stand, divided we fall. It has worked well, let it be encouraged and strengthened. We must be careful to sanction nothing that would impair its efficiency.

It is forty-nine years since I entered the trade, and during that period there have been many changes in the character and conditions of trade. In the days of my early life the work of a master bookseller was much less strenuous than that of to-day. It is a life of constant anxiety, and the pursuit of it demands much vigilance, tact, and intelligence. It is a noble vocation, of which we have reason to feel proud, and it is a pity that it does not receive more adequate remuneration and better compensation for labour expended.

The character of a nation is often determined by the output and quality of its literature. We have only to think of the nations of antiquity, Greece and Rome, and now of Babylon. Our calling is hardly second to that of the parson and schoolmaster. The purveyor of good books is forming the mental and moral life of a people. Our extinction would be a national loss.

The report of the year's work which the Secretary has just read may appear somewhat meague, but I assure you it covers a good deal of labour, and I may tell you from personal knowledge that your interests are being well looked after by the executive in London.

The Chairman then referred to matters of an important and vital character that would have to be discussed by the meeting.

After the report had been seconded by Mr. Brady, these matters were warmly discussed, and resolutions thereupon passed with great unanimity.

The Treasurer's report was adopted, and the officers were thanked for their services. Mr. Young, of Liverpool, in seconding this, expressed the wish of the meeting for the retiring Chairman's good health and long life.

The Chairman having to retire according to rule after two years of office, Mr. Hughes, of Manchester, was unanimously elected as Chairman for the next year. Mr. F. King was re-elected as Secretary, and Mr. G. Brady as Treasurer. The Committee was re-appointed, with the addition of Mr. Watson.

ACCIDENT INSURANCE.

There are many ways of insuring one's life against fatal railway accident by the purchase of one of the numerous periodicals, railway time tables, &c., which contain insurance coupons; but insurance against accidents of all kinds is another matter, and one which—on account, no doubt, of the much greater risk involved—has never up till now been possible at a popular price.

Charles Letts & Co., however, are providing such an insurance with their admirable diaries, and the benefits obtainable by the purchase of a sixpenny diary are truly remarkable. On looking through the coupon contained in one of these diaries, we find that under certain conditions (named in the coupon) £1,000 will be paid in the event of death by railway accident: this includes Electric and Underground Railways. £500 will be paid in the event of death by what we may broadly describe as any other accident of travel, with proportionate payments for permanent or partial disablement, these risks being covered for twelve months. But this is not all; the most remarkable feature of this insurance is that for a limited time £3 per week will be paid to anyone being incapacitated by an accident of any kind, including football, cricket, hunting, motoring, cycling, volunteering, &c., or certain forms of illness.

A terrible accident may occur at any time; who therefore will risk losing the chance of securing £1,000 for 6*d.*? Indeed it is an absolute duty of all having others dependent on them to lose no time in registering themselves as holders of a Charles Letts's insurance coupon.

An instance of the result of such foresight was shown in the recent Liverpool-Southport accident, as a result of which no less than £3,000 was paid to the heirs of owners of these coupons killed in this accident. In each case 2*d.* was the sole payment made for £1,000, this being a nominal fee charged for the registration of the holder of the coupon by the General Accident Assurance Corporation of Perth, who guarantee the payment of claims made under the conditions of the coupon.

There is no need to fear that this insurance will cause anyone to be involved in an accident, but it may interest our readers to know that during last year 1,073 persons were killed and 6,885 injured by railway accident alone in the United Kingdom. According to the estimates of a qualified insurance actuary, 70,000 persons annually meet their death by accident, so that it will be seen the danger is worth guarding against.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Macmillan's Magazine, the oldest of the shilling monthlies—the first number appeared in November 1859—is about to join the ranks of the 'Sixpennies,' and the November number will be issued at the lower rate. The new series of Macmillan will contain as many pages as the old one, but the type used will be larger and clearer, and the double-column page will be discarded. It is the intention of the publishers to issue with each number of the magazine a complete list of their recent and forthcoming publications, with notes on new books, and it is hoped that this feature may be found attractive to librarians and bookbuyers generally. Macmillan will be printed on thin paper, which has been specially manufactured of such weight that each number will be within the penny postage rate.

It didn't Work.—Mamma: Fighting again, Willie? Didn't I tell you to stop and count one hundred whenever you were angry?

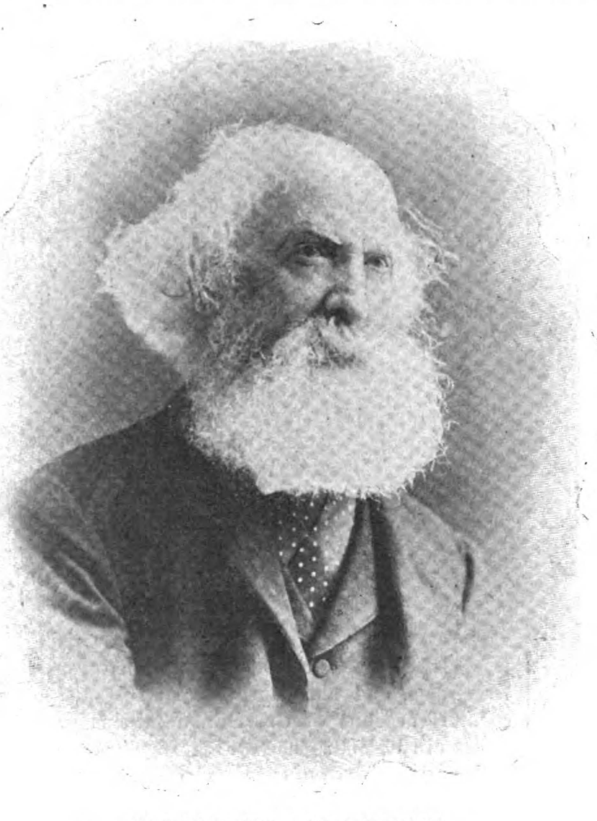
EDMUND EVANS.

THE name of Edmund Evans will be indissolubly associated with the history of colour-printing in England, and his famous reproductions of the drawings of Caldecott and Kate Greenaway are classics in their way. But, apart from these names, in his life he came across many interesting figures, though he did not win his position without effort. He was born February 23, 1826, so that death came to him in his eightieth year. He remembered well the old coaching days, and used to see the mail-coaches every evening setting out for the Kentish towns. A little later he made the acquaintance of railways, and used to tell of a singularly uncomfortable excursion on the old South-Eastern Railway, taken in company with Birket Foster. It was a cheap trip to Dover, and they travelled third class, in open, unroofed trucks, with seats of rails, like garden benches. The South-Eastern Railway has plenty of tunnels between London and Dover, and, in addition to the ordinary discomforts of such a journey, it rained hard most of the time.

He was educated at a school in Jamaica Row, kept by an old sailor named Bart Robson. Even in his school days he loved to make little drawings and sketches; but geometry was his favourite study, and he saved up his pocket money in order to buy two old books of logarithm tables. His school days, however, did not provoke any great enthusiasm in him; and his first attempt to make a living was hardly more satisfying. In November 1839 he became 'reader's boy' in Samuel Bentley's printing house (Samuel Bentley was the brother of Richard Bentley, the publisher); but an impediment in his speech depreciated his usefulness, and he became warehouse boy, or, to be plain, errand boy. He learnt nothing of what was afterwards his profession in this capacity, of course; but he used to tell of an incident which illustrates the tendency of his mind. The firm 'had a good reputation for printing woodcuts, and here I saw woodcuts for the first time. I made an attempt to copy one of a mule engraved by Vasey for Yarrell's "Natural History." I scratched this figure on a piece of thick slate; then I tried to take impressions of it in the dinner hour, when the rollers and presses were unoccupied.' It was a crude beginning, and, moreover, he got severely reprimanded for meddling with the rollers. But it was a beginning; and a few months later he got his first real chance. The well-known engraver Landells, of Fleet Street, took him as an apprentice. 'I experienced great joy,' he wrote; 'the work was quite to my liking, and the relief of getting to work at nine o'clock instead of seven made me feel quite a young gentleman.'

Landells had one of the largest engraving businesses in London, and Evans's experience with him was sufficiently varied. He met the two Dalziels here; and on one occasion he took a drawing to Charles Dickens at Devonshire Terrace for the author to see before it was engraved; it was one of the illustrations to 'Master Humphrey's Clock.' But apart from such experiences as these, Evans made a real friendship at this time. Birket Foster used to do a great deal of work for Landells, and the two young men, with many tastes in common, became fast friends. The chief professional event of the period, however, was the founding of the Illustrated London News, for which before long Landells did a large part of the engraving. Birket Foster used to draw many sketches for it on wood, and Evans was allowed to engrave some of them. Punch was also started about this time, and Landells did work for that also. Mr. Evans remembered well the drawings by H. G. Hine, 'Crowquill' (Alfred Forrester), Kenny Meadows, Leech, Harvey, 'Phiz' (Hablot K. Browne), and Sir John Gilbert, which used to pass through the firm's hands. Often he answered the door for Punch callers, and had many a kind word or look from them. Oddly enough, one of the kindest of them all, Thackeray—then as much artist as author—'never spoke to me or took any notice of me, but marched in with his long strides and took whatever was laid out for him. I remember this hurt my small dignity, for I thought he might have given me a grin.'



THE LATE MR. EDMUND EVANS.

His apprenticeship to Landells expired in May 1847, and, though Landells wished to keep him as his assistant, he decided to set up on his own account. He soon got work to do for the Illustrated London News, and among other commissions made a series of sketches of English watering-places with Birket Foster. Before long he had to enlarge his staff, and moved from Wine Office Court—where a quiet lawyer had complained of the noise of the presses—to 4 Racquet Court. These premises were subsequently extended to 116 and 119 Fleet Street. Much of his work at first consisted of illustrated covers for 'yellow backs.' Popular artists—men like Cruikshank, Gilbert, Harrison Weir, Phiz, Absolam, Keene, Foster, Meadows, Walter Crane, and Caldecott—did the designs, which were engraved on wood; two transfers were then taken, one being used for red and the other for blue. There was a huge business done in this sort of book, especially in American fiction. 'I have had advance sheets,' wrote Mr. Evans, 'for three publishers of the same book, each, of course, wanting their own book published first.' And there was probably plenty of competition among the engravers. A publisher one day came into Mr. Evans's office with a copy of London Society. 'There,' he said, 'you could not print a red like that for the life of you.' It was a piece of work from Evans's own press.

Among the earliest artists to do work for the new firm was Walter Crane, who 'did all sorts of things for me. The only subjects I found he could not draw were figure subjects of everyday life.' The result of this association was a whole host of pretty coloured books for children, a line which the firm has maintained steadily ever since. But the most notable achievements were the toy-books of Caldecott and Kate Greenaway. Caldecott's 'Old Christmas' and 'Bracebridge Hall' attracted Evans's notice, and he wrote to suggest some work in colours. Caldecott accepted the suggestion, and the business relations between them, then begun, were always of the pleasantest. The famous series of books began in 1876 with 'John Gilpin' and 'The House that Jack Built'; 10,000 copies of each were sold almost immediately, and of later volumes as many as 100,000 were printed for the first edition. Limited éditions de luxe also sold out at once. Hardly less successful were most of Kate Greenaway's books. Miss Greenaway was paid £5 for each of her drawings, and her work was always extraordinarily careful in the minutest details. She herself made costumes, for instance, to put on her models whenever she wanted a particular effect. She drew 'for the love of it,' but was a very slow worker. Evans wanted her to collaborate with Caldecott in a coloured alphabet, but, though she admired Caldecott's drawings immensely, she would not assent to the plan; and probably, considering the difference of their styles, she was right.

Work brought Evans many friends. His house at Witley knew many distinguished guests. George Eliot, in particular, was a frequent visitor, a common love of flowers and a garden constituting a bond of friendship. Evans asked her to write a little story for Kate Greenaway to illustrate, but she was unable to accept the suggestion. 'It is not my way to write anything,' she answered, 'except from my own inward prompting.' She was only one among many well-known friends and acquaintances, not one of whom, it may be safely said, ever felt anything but the deepest respect for Edmund Evans. The simplicity and gentleness of his character influenced all who knew him, and the slight figure—'thin as Edmund' was a saying about him even in his childish days—was always welcomed in private life as in business. To him, indeed, with his strong religious feeling and unaffected sincerity, the two sides of his life were not separable. 'I believe there can be no better school for the exercise of faith, hope, and love than business,' he once said; 'the Archbishop of Canterbury can have no better scope!' No one lived up to that saying more truly than himself.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

INTERESTING REFERENCES BY THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.

We are glad to see from the 'Acta' chronicled by the Cambridge University Reporter that the Vice-Chancellor Master of Trinity Hall, in resigning his office on September 30, in his address to the Senate, made references which will interest the publishing world.

Mr. Beck said:

'It has become a kind of custom that the outgoing Vice-Chancellor should take this occasion to say a few words: whether valedictory, or a sort of summary of events, does not matter so much, as that he should keep open this prominent opportunity of personally addressing the University, saying his own say, and without any consultation with others.

'I conform therefore to this custom, though in most things the less said the better, and though I am loath to unearth last year's Reporter, or, in the case of benefactors or of the other helpers of our work, to have any air of appraising or parading a selection of names.

'But the precedence is theirs who are no longer visible to us. Augustus Austen Leigh, the late Provost of King's, with tact and clearness presided over his college and over the university, making no enemy, taking no offence, self-effacing, the flower of a perfect life. Charles John Clay, a generous nature, in his life's work at the University Press, became the embodiment and soul of that institution, and men forgot that in his year he had stood in the first rank in Classics between E. H. Perowne and F. J. A. Hort. I am glad to see the names of his sons still connected with their father's work, one here, and one at the new quarters of the Press Warehouse in London, and to know that their work and its spirit are good and hereditary.'

MR. FISHER UNWIN'S FIRST NOVEL COMPETITION.

Mr. Unwin has just made public the result of this competition, of which, it will be remembered, the first announcement was made about a year ago. The main conditions were that anyone was eligible to compete who had never had a novel published; that Mr. Unwin was sole and absolute judge; and that the author of the winning novel should receive a prize of £100.

In response to this invitation a large number of authors submitted novels, amounting in the aggregate to 20,000,000 words, a pile of MS. which it needed herculean labour to sift, especially as it was desirable to do so with as little delay as possible.

A large number of the competitors failed to differentiate between the novel proper and the kind of story which is technically known as belonging to the newspaper serial class. So plenty of stories came in which might probably have been knocked into shape for the columns of a periodical, but which were in no sense novels.

Secondly, many writers had an idea—some of them an excellent idea—for a novel, and began admirably, but through lack of craftsmanship were unable to keep up their level.

In the writer of the winning novel Mr. Unwin is confident that he has discovered a new novelist of distinct promise. This writer is a lady, Mrs. Baillie Saunders; and Mr. Unwin will publish her book, entitled 'Saints in Society,' on October 16. Mrs. Baillie Saunders is the wife of the Rev. F. Baillie Saunders, Chaplain of Marylebone Old Parish Chapel.

LIFE AND WRITINGS OF ST. PATRICK.*

This work, published this week by Messrs. M. H. Gill & Son, of Dublin, contains over 700 pages, and aims at giving a full and accurate account of the Saint's missionary labours in Ireland. The distinguished author makes the writings of St. Patrick himself the basis of his work, and for the rest trusts chiefly to the ancient authorities, whose reliability as historians he first carefully and candidly examines.

Wherever possible, too, he has personally visited the scenes of the Saint's labours, and so has been able, he says, 'to give a local colouring to the dry record, and also to catch up, as far as possible, the echoes, daily growing fainter, of the once vivid traditions of the past.'

In the Preface the author submits that his purpose in writing this Life is not controversial; 'it is to show St. Patrick as he was known to his contemporaries and their immediate successors who had known the man, or received the living stories of his disciples. 'Most people,' he justly claims, 'will think such a narrative of far more value from every point of view than the speculations of some of our modern critics and philologists, who would rather do away with St. Patrick altogether than admit that he got his mission from Rome.'

TERCENTENARY OF THE AUTHOR OF 'RELIGIO MEDICI.'

In connection with the 300th anniversary of the death of Sir Thomas Browne, author of 'Religio Medici,' &c., which is being celebrated in Norwich by the unveiling of a statue to his memory, Messrs. Jarrold & Sons announce a souvenir consisting of twelve collotype illustrations with descriptive matter, by Mr. Charles Williams, F.R.C.S.E., of Norwich.

Mr. Williams has for many years been an admirer and collector of everything relating to Sir Thomas Browne, and has much material to draw on for the purpose.

CALUMNIATORS OF NELSON.

We are glad to see in the extremely interesting Trafalgar number of the United Service Magazine, which contains a splendid tribute to Nelson by Captain Mahan, that a British officer, Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge, G.C.B., has a strong protest against the calumnies against Nelson contained in Volume VIII of 'The Cambridge Modern History,' dealing with the period of 'The French Revolution.' It is past understanding how any writers of English history can have given credence to the charges made against Nelson by Neapolitan Jacobins and others—charges which Captain Mahan, after most careful examination, pronounces 'mere futile prevarication.'

Every admirer of Nelson will share in Sir Cyprian Bridge's regret that such an important text-book, which will be used by hundreds, probably thousands, of the most promising youth of England, should contain insinuations of treachery and inhumanity against Nelson on evidence which is rejected by the greatest naval historian of the day.

Surely, for the honour of England, where ever such calumnies are printed the indignant protests of such men as Captain Mahan and Admiral Sir Cyprian Bridge should be given also.
